POWER'S ON-AVEC linesman Gundvaldson gives two thumbs up after restoring power in Savoonga. Gundvaldson arrived in Savoonga Dec. 29 and spent the New Year holiday in the village instead of at a family gathering in North Dakota. As of Jan. 3, power had been restored to all of Savoonga

Aftermath of prolonged power outage includes several burst and broken pipes

By Diana Haecker

Residents of Savoonga endured a week of power outages due to freezing salt spray that iced up power lines and transformers, leaving dozens of homes with frozen and burst plumbing. More than 100 Savoonga residents had to seek refuge in the generator-powered Savoonga school for several days, and rang in the new year by overnighting in classrooms.

Meera Kohler, chief executive officer and president of the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative Inc., said a unique combination of adverse weather conditions—freezing temperatures, open ocean water and strong north-northeast windswreaked havoc with the Savoonga power transmission system.

The problem started on Dec. 26 around 10 p.m. Temperatures were below 0°F, strong winds blew and the moist, salt-laden sea spray settled on Savoonga's power lines and transformers. The freezing salt spray caused the electricity to flash to ground, resulting in widespread power outages. On Dec. 30, 80 out

Troopers call off search for man after efforts fail to locate John Koezuna

By Tyler Rhodes

Despite finding a backpack and other belongings Sunday, Alaska State Troopers have called off the search for 55-year-old John

Koezuna who has been missing since Dec. 20. Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill said the search was called off Jan. 4 after extensive air and ground efforts failed to reveal the location of the missing man.

Jerry Steiger of the Nome Volunteer Search and Rescue department said Koezuna's backpack and .22-caliber rifle were found approximately two miles north of the Sinuk River along the Norton Sound coast Jan. 2. The search for Koezuna started Dec. 27 after his brother-in-law, Hank Irelan, reported him overdue. Koezuna left a note at a cabin in Woolley Lagoon Dec. 20 stating his intention to hike to Nome, a trek of approximately 50 miles along Describing it as finding a needle in a haystack, Steiger said the backpack was sitting atop a high bank along the coast, approximately 15 miles from the cabin in which Koezuna had been staying. "The thing that struck us was that it was definitely left there. It didn't appear to be dropped randomly; they were placed there," Steiger said. Since the pack and gun were placed on a high spot, they were able to remain clear of snow due to winds.

Steiger said finding Koezuna's belong ings doesn't necessarily yield clues as to where he may be located. "I'm not real sure what it means for search efforts," he said. "What it leads us to is kind of questionable."

According to findings by Mikunda, Cottrell and Co., "the financial statements present fairly, in all material respects, the financial position of Nome Joint Utility System as of December 31, 2008 and 2009, and results of its operations and cash flows for the years then ended in CPA John Bost presented the audit to the utility board Dec. 21 via telephone.

Perusal of the financial statements shows the following items of interest to those who want to go beyond the light switch, faucet and flush handle in knowing what makes the lights come on and the water run:

Dear Editor:

There are too many liars and cheaters holding rare jobs in rural Alaska. When you sign up for a job or a leadership position, City council, Tribal Council, State Government, etc., you are saying, "Pick me, I know how to do this." After being chosen for the position and it is found out that you need training to do your job correctly, then you lied or cheated to get that job/position.

During the recent search and rescue efforts for the missing persons in my area (Brevig Mission and Teller), search teams came from Shishmaref and Wales to help the teams from Brevig and Teller. It was to my and Brevig Mission Search and Rescue(S&R) team's surprise at the amount of equipment the other S&R teams had, including our neighbor Teller's S&R equipment. One of the S&R members from Shishmaref came to my home and asked me why I didn't get involved with Brevig Mission's S&R. My only answer that I thought the person could relate to was that I do not go out into the country to hunt. My other family members bring what they can and I am content with that. If I want it or need it I will go and get it.

The real reason for my not getting involved is the experiences I had with the local controlling elite. You know the ones who control who get elected, who gets the jobs locally, etc. I am always met with opposition when bringing real values to the community as a whole. Their family members and others who work/listen to them must get first of everything, so to speak. They even gave a job to one of their family members just because he got a disconnect notice. Now that position is no longer in our town. I cannot build values only to get them torn down by local elite who cannot seem to help or honestly care for themselves. It hurts the heart and mind too much. In recent public meetings I have also noticed leaders act like robots, like they don't like what they are doing, but have to, like they got no choice but to do it that way. Ever wonder why there are so many suicides in our area?

A Matter of Semantics

It's all in how we look at things. This past election the Republicans and their Tea Party Friends got their shorts in a wad over that venerable staple of the pork barrel known as the earmark. Earmarks are select portions of the hog identified for special uses in a process called "bringing home the bacon."

All of these "stop the government spending" boys decried earmarks as bad policy and promised to get rid of these horrid practices. They were true to their word. They got rid of the earmarks. They are now called "phone marks" or maybe "elbow marks."

Don't ya just want to laugh? Do they think we are so easily fooled? (Don't answer that.) After all, an earmark by any other name is still and earmark and it smells like pork. - N.L.M.-

Anchorage to be closer to my children and grandchildren. I want to thank so many of you for making my years here a treasured part of my life's memories. ...and what great memories I have — flying into Serpentine, driving into Pilgrim, the first and only time I've been in a play, the open mic nights, the Polar Bear Jump, art classes, the musicals, the fund raisers (bidding $100 for a cake), Iditarod, the craft and art fairs, the garden tours, Richard Beneville's grand tour (I took my grandchildren three years in a row), Summersize, fishing, camping, my friends at ... and so many more pictures of times shared with friends.

I have felt very much at home and part of the community here. I know I will miss Nome and the people I met over the past seven years. Hopefully we will keep in contact and I trust we will meet again - sometime, somewhere. Best wishes for a wonderful new year.

Dear Nome Nugget,

This is in response to the article written by Tyler Rhodes. I am certain that he did what he could with limited information, so permit me to fill in the gaps left by Mr. Varnadoe. Evergreen is looking into the possibility of using a twin engine helicopter? That is what we had until the autumn of 2008, and he knows it full well. He was the station manager at Merrill Field when I flew that aircraft down there for service, and it has been parked there ever since. I had invited him to visit Nome several times to see what I was up against, and he finally made it. Now he sounds like an expert. He is not, nor is he a competent aviator, but that is another matter. So I returned to Nome in the late autumn of 2008 and continued both mail AND passenger service with a single engine A-Star helicopter. I knew what I was up against and was not going to drop it on an inexperienced pilot. It was in July of 2009 that Mr. Varnadoe decided to terminate passenger service to the island. I was standing next to the Nome base manager and heard it for myself on the speaker phone. I left Nome within a month, after having flown that contract for nearly seven years.

Evergreen certainly wants in on the federal funding to provide additional air service. They have undoubtedly been keeping the contract aircraft out of service for just such a profit. Read the postal contract for yourself, it is not confidential. It specifies a twin engine aircraft, and I flew it solely out there for six years. It is a great aircraft, the BO-105 CBS-5, tail number N730TS. No one else has ever flown that aircraft out there; the base manager flew a version, tail number

Compiled by Diana Haecker Miller concedes, state elections certified

Concluding a two-month long drama in and out of state and federal courts, Republican Senatorial candidate Joe Miller last week conceded. On the last day of the year, Governor Sean Parnell and Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell signed the final certification documents declaring old and new Senator Lisa Murkowski the winner of the 2010 U.S. Senate race.

Miller was the Sarah Palin-backed, Tea Party sanctioned surprise candidate who won the Republican primary. Murkowski then waged a write-in campaign and garnered more than 10,000 more votes than Miller in the general election. Miller contested the state's election process in both state and federal courts until the Alaska Supreme Court last week ruled that the state conducted the elections in a proper manner.

The Supreme Court began its ruling with "the bedrock principle that ... one of the fundamental prerogatives of citizenship" is "the right of citizens is to cast their ballots and thus participate in the selection of those who control their government." The ruling cites the Supreme Court's past case law and Alaska's statutory regulation in its decision determining that "the voter's intention is paramount."

Cora Campbell named Fish and Game Commissioner

Governor Sean Parnell last week appointed 31-year old Cora Campbell as the commissioner of the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. Campbell's name was one of two submitted for the position by the Joint Board of Fisheries and Game. The other candidate was Ron Somerville

Campbell has been serving as acting commissioner since December 1. The appointment was not welcomed in all quarters as the ANB Grand Camp sent out a press release saying that they consider Campbell inexperienced. ANB quoted Campbell's close ties to the commercial fishing industry as a bias that may prevent her from making good judgment calls to manage Alaska's wildlife resources.

Campbell was born and raised in Petersburg and has served two governors. She was first appointed in May 2007 as Governor Palin's fisheries policy advisor. Her responsibilities included oversight of state fisheries policies, chairing the Fisheries and Oceans subcabinets, serving on the Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute Board of Directors and coordinating activities of the agencies involved in regulation and development of the state's subsistence, personal use, sport, and commercial fisheries. Campbell's responsibilities later expanded to include wildlife and other natural resource and environmental issues. Prior to her service in the governor's office, Campbell worked in state and federal fishery and regulatory forums, served as executive director of a regional fishing association with an emphasis on economic development and cooperative research, supervised a public outreach program focusing on the federal subsistence process and served on advisory panels to the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and the North Pacific Research Board. She has also fished commercially for salmon, herring, and crab and managed shore operations for a fishing business.

Rep. Young to lead subcommittee on tribal affairs

AP- U.S. Rep. Don Young will chair the newly formed subcommittee on Indian and Alaska Native Affairs.

The appointment was announced last week by the incoming-chairman of the House Natural Resources Committee, Washington state Rep. Doc Hastings. He said a subcommittee will focus on such things as developing tribal economies and reducing federal obstacles to tribal

Hastings says Young brings considerable knowledge to the job and will ensure tribal issues receive proper attention. Young, a Republican elected to his 20th term this fall, says he considers the assignment a great position for him to be in to help Alaska and the country. The new term of Congress began this week.

Salazar upholds oil and gas lease sales in Chukchi Sea, upholds "threatened" status of polar bears

Department of Interior Secretary Ken Salazar issued a revised offshore oil plan that will allow drilling for oil and gas in the Chukchi Sea. Salazar's announcement finalized a revised 2007-2012 nationwide offshore oil leasing plan.

The 2007-2012 offshore oil leasing plan was challenged in court and the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia ruled that the plan failed to adequately assess the environmental impacts of opening up areas off Alaska to drilling. A court in Alaska also separately ruled this year that the environmental analysis underlying the lease sale in the Chukchi Sea was unlawful.

In a separate but related development, Salazar upheld a decision to list polar bears as merely "threatened," rather than the more protective status of "endangered." Salazar is not only catching flak from conservation groups, but also faces a lawsuit by the State of Alaska.

Alaska's department of law signaled intent to sue the Fish and Wildlife Service over the expansive designation of critical habitat for polar bears. The Fish and Wildlife Service has designated an unprecedented 187,157 square miles of critical habitat for the polar bear, an area larger than 48 of the 50 states. Governor Parnell said that additional regulations and consultations and litigation triggered by this habitat designation would delay jobs, increase the costs of and even prevent resource development projects.

of the 210 AVEC powered homes were out of service, while flown-in linesmen were working on the power poles in -40°F wind chills and trying to determine the cause of the outages. "It was like chasing gremlins around," Kohler said, describing how linesmen worked non-stop to restore the failing power in the extreme weather conditions.

By nighttime Dec. 30, the airport lights were back on and the gas station was powered again. The clinic was off power, but was hooked up to the adjacent fire hall. Also, it became apparent that there was no problem with power generation, but that salt was the culprit to blame for the disaster. Kohler said that while there was a generation technician on stand-by, a generator problem could be solved by simply changing a fuse. Residents with woodstoves or backup generators were able to pull through the emergency situation on their own. But a store clerk said that city hall and the school were packed with people trying to find refuge. Since the power outages began, the school served as the emergency shelter and housed more than 100 people for a few nights, said principal Roxy Quick. She said on Monday that the last people left on Jan. 2, leaving the school impeccable and with "thank you" notes on the teachers' desks in appreciation of having been able to use the classrooms as temporary homes. On Jan. 3, school was back in session.

On Jan. 2, linesmen were still responding to outages here and there. Although temperatures have warmed up, a southeast wind now had kicked up with gusts up to 40 mph and blizzard conditions prevailed, causing icing and power lines slapping. Line crews continued to respond to outages as they occurred. By the morning of Jan. 3, Kohler said that power was on in all locations, but that salt tracking would still continue to cause intermittent outages

A plan to de-ice the lines with the airplane deicing fluid propylene glycol was called off when AVEC found out that the fluid is not compatible with galvanized metal and that sticky residue could lead to further salt build-up. Kohler said they have consulted with North Slope oilfield operations managers and came to the conclusion that the use of plain water with a high-pressure washer would do the trick to clean up the salt from the hardware.

On Jan. 3, AVEC was testing an extension wand with a pressure washer at their facility in Anchorage and planned to ship it to Savoonga.

Savoonga vice-mayor Elvin Noongwook said that the salt spray freezing on power lines was a peculiar problem that has not been experienced in Savoonga before. He said that the ocean usually is frozen by this time of the year.

As soon as the emergency became apparent, the city of Savoonga contacted the state's division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management. They worked with the Red Cross to send needed items to the island. Kawerak's Melanie Bahnke said that Kawerak, while not an emergency services provider, facilitated the collection of food and supplies and arranged for transport to Savoonga. Airlines Bering Air and Era flew the donations to Savoonga Noongwook said that pipes burst in many homes as well as in the Headstart building. He said it's yet too early to know the total damage to all the homes and businesses. However, Noongwook said they still need medications, cough syrup and nonperishable food items.

The city of Savoonga issued a disaster declaration. On Jan. 4, a team from the Alaska Division of Emergency Management was headed out to Savoonga to assess the damage and to determine the next steps that the state needs to take, said the division's Jeremy Zedek. The Bering Strait Regional Housing Authority sent out plumbers to deal with the problem of broken and burst pipes in the community.

A store clerk said the store is back on power, but the shelves are empty. Most of the canned goods, fresh food and perishables were handed out by candlelight to feed the people during the week of power outages. Store employees worked day and night to hand out food and then to clean up the store. Ironically, a load of 800 pounds of groceries was sitting in Nome waiting to be flown to the island, but held back because it would have frozen in the store. The Red Cross sent out 400 pounds of food and supplies in the form of bottled water, blankets, nonperishable food, basic medicines and baby formula.

Kellev McGuirk, disaster services director with the Red Cross, said the organization works closely with the Alaska Division of Emergency Management. "Our goal was to help fill the immediate needs of the community," she said. The Adventist Community Services group also sent 20 sleeping bags, propane cans and space heaters. McGuirk said they refrained from sending personnel up to help as they didn't want to overcrowd the town with yet more mouths to feed and to give shelter to.

McGuirk and Zedek at the Division of Emergency Management agree that preparedness is key and that this disaster brings home the message of having remote communities trained in emergency response. "Mayor Myron Kingeekuk was given a very difficult task to see the community through a challenging time, and they did great," Zedek said. He praised the city for requesting assistance when they needed it and said that the mayor has done a great job, especially considering that he's been on the job for only a short time. Zedek said the division seeks to prepare communities in emergency response. "I had one person call to thank us and to request information on how to prepare for emergencies," McGuirk said. She said she would love to offer courses to help small communities prepare for emergencies.

As of press time, power remains on to all locations in Savoonga, but there were intermittent outages due to salt tracking. Kohler said the power system did not sustain any damage other than the cost of responding to the emergency. She added that the ordeal ruined the holiday plans for the linesmen, but that they were happy to help out and restore power to the people of Savoonga. Kohler said that while burying lines in rocky areas like Savoonga or areas with permafrost is completely impractical, AVEC is now looking at technologies like special coating on power lines that may be suitable to withstand salt spray.

- Diesel fuel has been the largest expense.
- Rates generated sufficient cash flow to covering operating costs, debt paying and capital investments in the plant, but did not cover depreciation. Depreciation produced a paper loss because a recent accounting law (GASB 34) demands the utility charge the entire depreciation of the entire plant as an operating expense. Financial statements showed net operating revenues for 2009 of $13,390,390 and, with depreciation expense of $4,529,587,

Board members were vendors?

Notes to Basic Financial Statements show an item stating that NJUS "has made payments for services and equipment rental to entities and individuals that are on the Utility's Board of Directors or the City Council. Payments to related parties totaled $115,865 and $567,457 respectively for the years ended December 31, 2009 and 2008.

Utility manager John K. Handeland was not available for comment Monday. A number of public office holders in the two entities have occupations and businesses in the construction, heavy equipment and electrical trades.

In a couple separate statements concerning state and federal grant money, auditors said their examination showed that NJUS had internal controls to safeguard major programs, but noted that one audit report on federal money passed through the state Department of Conservation had been reported late. Handeland and Bost noted that the pertinent agreement with DEC showing a breakdown between federal and state money had not been provided to NJUS for signature until after the deadline. Handeland said there were timelines in dealing with grant agencies that were outside of the utility's control.

"The fault is on the state, but we are not auditing the state, so we have to write it up on NJUS," Bost said.

Report made public

In several places the Mikunda Cottrell audit report states that the information is solely for the use of NJUS management, board members and others within the entity and federal and state awarding agencies ... "and is not intended to be and should not be used by anyone other than these specified parties.'

This, of course, is hogwash, federal and state laws on the books say information on the spending of public funds is by law available to members of the public on demand.

NJUS is a component of City of Nome, organized as an enterprise fund, which means it is financed and operated like a private business. Nevertheless, as a government organization, its operations and documents fall under federal and state open record "sunshine" laws. NJUS had copies of the report available for the public at its Dec. 21 meeting.

School board

assessment; Steve Gast, principal, and Carmen Russo, assistant principal, Nome-Beltz High School; David Keller, principal of Nome Elementary School and director of special education; and Sandy Harvey, special education coordinator.

Wehde's district office team members are Larry Thomas, operations manager; Bill Gartung, human resources manager and executive secretary for the board; and Cathi Wotjanek, finance manager.

Wehde recommended a 3 percent pay increase for the leadership team members in FY12. He gave the board copies of the current 12-step pay scale for principals and assistant principals with 205-day or 210-day contracts to compare with his proposed FY12 pay scale for certified directors, coordinators and principals with 205-day or 210-day contracts. The proposed pay schedule includes a 3 percent rate increase.

"As the leadership team at NPS is not part of a bargaining unit, it falls to the superintendent to review that pay scale or not and recommend to the board rates of compensation that are commensurate with the other schools in Alaska when desired," Wehde wrote in an e-mail to The Nome Nugget following the meeting. "I have chosen FY12 as a year for an adjustment."

In the e-mail Wehde said the 3 percent salary increase he is recommending for the leadership team does not apply to the superintendent's district office team members, all of whom are exempt staff with 260-day contracts. They are not part of a bargaining unit and they serve at the pleasure of the superintendent with the approval of the board, he explained.

During the work session Wehde said his recommendation for an updated pay schedule for the leadership team is a retainment/recruitment issue, and this is a good time to present it to the board because they are not distracted by salary negotiations with bargaining units for FY12. "I want to bring it to the table in January." he added ary," he added.

"I can't recall the board having a choice in those steps," said Board President Gloria Karmun. Wehde described the current pay schedule as an "old, old table." Noting that he always consults with Karmun on topics for board meeting agendas, Wehde said she will provide guidance to him on whether to bring his recommendations to the board for Jan. 11. Board member Barb Nickels said she would be happy to have them as an action item.

"This is the leadership team we need for the upcoming school year," Wehde said.

Nickels said three years ago NPS had to cut a lot of positions and ended up struggling and drowning. Wehde said costs are up, enrollment is static, and he does not anticipate a need to cut a lot of positions in FY12. He will look at attrition if necessary, he added. "We have a fine leadership team and a superintendent paid to make recommendations and we've already shrunk down," Nickels said.

Board member Betsy Brennan said when the NPS budget was cut by $270,000, the special education director had to leave, and work related to the position was contracted out to save money. "Dave [Keller] has two huge positions," she noted. "I understand why, but—." Keller serves as both elementary school principal and special education director.

Wehde said his predecessor as NPS superintendent, Rick Luthi, chose Nancy Guthrie to replace the special education director on a oncea-month basis. By coincidence, she was brought on just before the 712-student drop in enrollment, he added.

Brennan expressed concern that special education is being short-changed. She also said that Harvey does a wonderful job.

Wehde said Keller surfaced and said he would do both jobs, so NPS contracted with him and Harvey. Harvey served the district as a special education teacher for many years before becoming special education coordinator. Wehde said Harvey is a coordinator, but she is working in an administrative capacity under Keller's supervision. If either left, NPS would have a big problem, he added.

Board member Barb Amarok raised several questions about job descriptions. She asked why one of them says the jobholder must possess or be eligible for a Type B Administrative Certificate instead of requiring possession of the certificate.

"We would deem eligible someone who was principal in Washington state for six years," Wehde replied. He said some job descriptions are old, and some have been updated for new positions. "Job descriptions are very fluid and we try not to change them just to fit a person," he said. However, he added that all of the job descriptions need work.

Amarok said item 9 in the job description for the coordinator of curriculum and assessment seems odd because it reads: "Conducts formal certified staff observations." Wehde said it is not unusual for staff with a Type B certificate to do that. Brennan recalled that Wehde has said he wants more staff with Type B certificates at the elementary school. Nickels said it could be an advantage to keep the item in the job description.

Brennan noted that when NPS had to make huge budget cuts, the board had piled many jobs onto Wehde. Wehde said he can't do without any of the leadership team positions. "I will not back down off any of them unless there are severe budget cuts," he said. "I need FY12 to set the strategic plan in place."

"I think it is important for the board to see the actual job descriptions before we give you blanket approval," Amarok said. Wehde said the job descriptions can be revised.

"I don't see it as board approval or not," Nickels said. "I see it as honoring the superintendent's recommendations."

"The more information the better," board member Marie Tozier said.

Superintendent evaluation

The board discussed with Wehde the process for the superintendent evaluation to be conducted in January. Wehde said he will submit his self-evaluation through Gartung to the board along with copies of his current contract. Karmun said board members will receive evaluation forms, do individual evaluations of Wehde, come to consensus in an executive session and then meet with Wehde.

NPS budget timelines

Wotjanek said NPS is slightly under budget for the current school year due to a decrease in classified personnel. Open classified positions are being advertised now, she added. She said the winter budget revision report needs to be refined and she hopes to have it ready in January. She cited staff illnesses among reasons for the delayed report.

Wehde presented the board with a proposed FY12 budget development and adoption schedule. He noted that in the past key budget items to come before the board at regular meetings in January have included approval of the superintendent's contract and approval of exempt and administrative contracts.

The target dates for rehiring tenured and non-tenured teachers are Feb. 9 and Feb. 15, respectively, Wehde said. Nickels asked whether he knows of any teachers who do not plan to return to NPS in FY12. "No," he replied. Gartung said the turnover rate among teachers was 12 percent last year. Other timelines for FY12 budget preparation are:

- Feb. 22—Present the main revenue, expense and enrollment estimates in a working draft at a board work session;
- March 8—Present the draft budget at a regular board meeting;
- March 22—Discuss the draft budget at a board work session.
- April 11—Conduct a public hearing on the draft budget, followed by a special board work session.

• April 13—Discuss the draft budget at a regular board meeting.

• April 26—Adopt the budget at a special board meeting following a board work session.

• April 29—Submit the FY12 budget adopted by the board to the Nome Common Council for approval of the requested appropriation.

Wehde suggested the board consider having one of its members present the FY12 budget at a council meeting in May. Karmun said the board will take a more active role in the budget preparation process this year. "Wonderful," Wehde said.

School calendar issues

Wehde suggested that a school day be scheduled March 24 to make up for a day when school was closed due to inclement weather. The board will decide whether to amend the current school calendar to move in-service days for parent-teacher conferences from Thursday and Friday, March 24-25 to Friday and Saturday, March 25-26. Nickels said holding parent-teacher conferences on a Saturday may increase parent participation.

The board reviewed committee recommendations for the proposed FY12 school calendar, which is much like the current calendar. The draft FY12 calendar provides a 10-day break for the Christmas holidays (9 days of unpaid vacation and 1 paid holiday) and a five-day break during the Iditarod Sled Dog Race, all of which are unpaid vacation days.

It also includes 188 teacher contract days, five legal holidays, three teacher work days, five instructionally related in-service days, four inservice days used for parent-teacher conferences, and 171 student bodiesin-seat days. School would open Aug. 22, 2011 and close May 23, 2012 under the proposed calendar.

Amarok called for more effort to seek public input to the FY12 school calendar. She said it is not enough to publish the agenda for the Jan. 11 board meeting, which will include action on the proposed calendar. She suggested posting an announcement on page 1 of the NPS website that the board will adopt an FY12 school calendar at the Jan. 11 meeting and invite suggestions. In addition, Karmun suggested publishing information about the proposed calendar on the website's school board page.

FY12 board calendar

The board reviewed a draft of its calendar for FY12. The annual Legislative Fly-in and Youth Advocacy Institute sponsored by the Alaska Association of School Boards (AASB) is scheduled Jan. 29-Feb. 1 in Juneau. Attendees discuss issues influencing education, meet with legislators and learn how new legislation will affect their school districts. "Jan. 7 is the registration deadline to catch the room rate," Wehde said.

Noting that the draft FY12 board calendar lists four quarterly strategic plan reports, including one in July, Nickels said the board has talked about three reports. "I will make a note of that," Wehde said. "So three major ones is what I'm hearing, with the strategic plan as an umbrella."

Brennan told Wehde the board wants a description of the process used to evaluate staff. Wehde said he will provide board members with copies of the manual on how to evaluate staff that is used by NPS principals and supervisors.

Several board members said they favor conducting a board evaluation in June using the AASB board evaluation tool.

Other topics discussed

Berkely provided the board with a preliminary strategic plan update. The board is scheduled to receive a major strategic plan report on Jan. 11.

Wehde requested and received approval from Karmun to implement the AASB School Climate and Connectedness Survey at NPS. An AASB brochure describes the survey as follows: "A useful tool for schools looking to strengthen their overall climate and connectedness, improve their approach to increasing student achievement and help kids succeed beyond the classrooom."

Governor's draft budget shows money for Dist. 39

Gov. Sean Parnell's proposed state spending plan released Dec. 15 proposes $10.5 billion for next year, showing an increase of 8.5 percent from the general fund, making a total of about $5.5 billion coming from the general fund.

A quick comb of the budget shows around $31.4 million coming to Nome and Legislative District 39. Projects to receive money include: Nome Elementary School boiler replacement, $546,000; Anvil Mountain Correctional Center, 715,000; installation of solar panel at AANG hangar, $200,000 (federal); Nome Armory, deferred maintenance, $950,000; Nome-Council Rd., Mile 4-16, $4.5 million.

The budget plans $2.5 million for surface access to mining areas and resource development, giving equal shares of planning funds ($1.25 million) to the Western Access road from Fairbanks area to Nome and a road into Ambler mining resources.

Overall, Parnell has penciled in $100 million for deferred maintenance, $75 million for a state crime lab, $109 million for UAF-Fairbanks Live Sciences Building, and $25 million for the Renewable Energy Grant Fund.

MULTIPLE SEARCHES—Area search and rescue crews as well as the Alaska State Troopers have conducted multiple searches in the region this winter. The Troopers have just called off searches for Kenneth Lee and John Koezuna. Lee disappeared Dec. 16 between Brevig Mission and Teller (shown on the upper, left map) and is thought by Troopers to have fallen through the ice on Port Clarence.

Koezuna left a cabin Dec. 20 on Woolley Lagoon, en route to Nome by foot. Koezuna's backpack and gun were found by search crews Jan. 2 near the Sinuk River close to the Bering Sea coast (shown on lower, right map). Troopers believe Koezuna either walked out onto unstable ice in bad weather or tried to hunker down to escape the elements before succumbing and being covered by snow.

Search called off for Teller man

Troopers believe Kenneth Lee disappeared into Port Clarence waters

By Tyler Rhodes

Search and rescue efforts for a 22-year-old Teller man have been called off after no sign of Kenneth Lee could be found following an effort that spanned more than a week.

Lee was reported missing to Alaska State Troopers early in the morning Dec. 16 when he failed to arrive home in Teller after leaving Brevig Mission by snowmachine at midnight that day. Alaska State Troopers called off the search Dec. 24 after concluding that Lee likely ended up in the water.

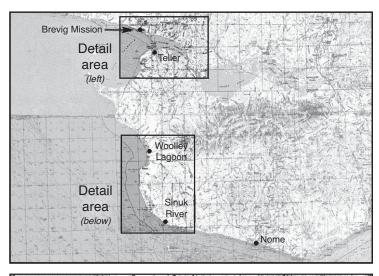

According to Trooper reports, before leaving Brevig Mission, Lee inquired about traveling directly between the two villages over the Port Clarence ice. Troopers said he was advised to take a safer route. Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill said searchers located a snowmachine trail that led to a patch of open water. Merrill said while it couldn't be confirmed that the trail was created by Lee, he said extensive, fruitless search efforts led to the conclusion that Lee most likely disappeared in Port Clarence.

The day Lee was reported missing, hasty search teams from the two villages covered area snowmachine trails while airlines were alerted to keep a look out for the missing man. A chartered Navajo plane also attempted to search from the air Dec. 16 but was forced to turn back after less than an hour due to deteriorating weather conditions.

The villages of Brevig Mission and Teller are approximately six miles apart as the crow flies and are separated by Grantley Harbor and Port Clarence. Narrow spits protrude north from Teller and south from Brevig Mission, dividing the two large bodies of water that ice over in the winter. Travel between the two villages over the ice by snowmachine or four-wheeler is common, however ice conditions can vary widely. Already one Teller resident was lost to a snowmachine falling through the ice Nov. 24. Searchers recovered the body of Barbara Scholten from the ice on Grantley Harbor Nov. 29.

As with the search for Scholten, weather hampered search efforts for Lee. High winds, ground storms and heavy snow all impeded rescue crews. Crews from Teller, Brevig Mission, Shishmaref and Nome all participated in the effort. After several days of ground searches, Troopers chartered an aircraft from Bering Air and flew spotters from Nome Search and Rescue to conduct and aerial search between the two villages. With no sign of Lee spotted during the flight, the Troopers called of their search the next day.

Troopers said they would resume search and recovery efforts if they received information that would increase the likelihood of recovering Lee. Troopers ask that anyone with information on Lee contact the Nome Troopers post at (907) 443-2835.

Sgt. Merrill recommends that people travel during the day when they can see where they are going and to file a travel plan with someone. Travel plan forms can be found on the Alaska State Trooper website or can be obtained from a village police officer or public safety officer.

Koezuna search

Steiger said the pack contained some items that could be used for survival, including food, dry socks and other gear to keep warm. He said there was no water bottle located with the pack, assuming Koezuna would have kept one with him wherever he went. "It's a shame to see him leave anything behind," Steiger said.

The backpack and gun were found by six members of the Nome Search and Rescue team who snowmachined along the coast Jan. 2, the day after a blizzard. Weather conditions have varied since Koezuna departed from the cabin at Woolley Lagoon, with high winds and severely cold wind-chills dominating weather patterns in the days after he started his trek. Despite warming temperatures as of Dec. 30, high winds and snowstorms have limited search efforts.

Merrill said Troopers believe Koezuna either became hypothermic during his attempted walk and wandered out onto the sea ice or he tried to dig in to the snow to weather out the storm. He said Troopers will stage aerial seaches in the spring after the snow recedes to attempt to locate Koezuna.

Merrill said multiple ground search efforts have taken place as well as aerial searches using an Air Force C-130, Trooper aircraft and a Bering Air plane Caravan chartered by a King Island group. Merrill said search efforts were concentrated in the Woolley Lagoon area and along the coast.

Merrill expressed gratitude on behalf of the Troopers for the efforts of Nome Volunteer Search and Rescue crews and the King Island group who rented the plane. "We appreciate their efforts and everyone involved," he said.

Ask a Doctor: Questions from second graders

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Mr. Slingsby's second grade class recently sent me an envelope of hand-written letters. Each letter contained a question regarding a medical problem. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here with permission from the students' parents. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Bob,

How do you get beaver fever? I thought I had it one time when my stomach hurt. Thanks. Owen Johanson (age 7).

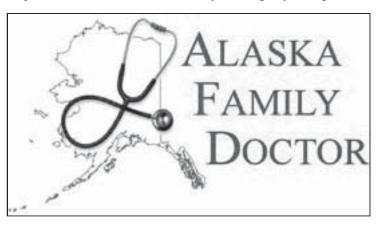

Dear Owen,

Thank you for your excellent question. "Beaver Fever" is one of the most common sicknesses children can get in their stomachs. It is caused by a small bug called a parasite that lives in rivers, ponds, and lakes. The name of the parasite is Giardia lamblia. It is so small that people need a microscope to see it.

Giardia is usually passed into the water by animals like beavers, and lots of Giardia swim in the water downstream from beaver dams. That is why people call it "beaver fever" when they get sick. If a person swallows even a few Giardia from drinking water out of a river or pond, the parasite can divide in the person's intestines and become thousands of little Giardia. The Giardia parasites make the person's stomach hurt and somecomes out when you throw up or have diarrhea.

It is also important to wash your hands when you are sick to clean off any parasites, bacteria, or viruses that may be hiding on your fingers.

times cause a very stinky diarrhea.

Water from rivers and ponds is safe to drink after filtering or boiling the water or treating it with special chemicals to kill the parasites.

Beaver fever is treated by taking an antibiotic that kills the parasite. Your doctor will also ask you to drink plenty of water to replace what Dear Dr. Bob.

When I was 7 years old I got pneumonia. It felt like I had a terrible cough and a cold. Could you tell me how I could have got it and what I should do to never catch it again? Thanks Dr. Bob. From Sarah Wade (age 7).

Dear Sarah, I am sorry to hear you had pneumonia. This is a very common problem caused by germs that attack people's lungs. The germs are either bacteria or viruses. These germs are tricky because they make people give the sickness to other people by making them cough. When you cough, you make an invisible cloud of these germs with your breath. If you could see the cloud of germs, it would look like the fog that forms when you breathe out in the cold air. Anyone who is standing near a person who coughs may breathe in a part of the invisible cloud of germs. This is probably how you caught the pneumonia. We can help stop the spread of pneumonia germs by covering our mouths when we cough. Do you know how to cough into your sleeve?

I am sure you took a good medicine to kill the germs, and your body healed because your lungs are strong. It is important to eat healthy foods, like vegetables and fish, and stay away from cigarette smoke to keep your lungs strong.

Dear Dr. Bob,

Sometimes my lips get chapped real bad and it hurts. Why does this happen and what should I do? Thanks. Ethan Mostoller (second grade).

Dear Ethan,

Thank you for your letter. Sometimes my lips get chapped, too. So I know what you mean when you say it hurts. Here is what I do to make my lips feel better and prevent them from getting chapped. Maybe it will help you, too.

First, ask your parents to help you apply some lip balm with bees wax or petrolatum to your lips each day. This helps keep your lips from getting dry and cracked.

Second, try not to lick your lips. When your saliva evaporates, it makes your lips even drier than when you first licked them.

Third, drink plenty of fluid. Your body uses the extra water to keep your lips moist so they will not crack.

Next, try to remember to breathe through your nose. Sometimes lips dry out when we breathe through our mouths for long periods of time.

Finally, be sure to eat healthy foods and take your vitamins. Sometimes cracked lips, especially at the corners of the mouth, mean we are not getting the right vitamins in our diet.

RurAL CAP

The Rural Alaska Community Action Program, Inc. announced that in a unanimous vote of the Board, Andrew Ebona of Juneau was recently re-elected President of the Board of Directors for the fifth consecutive year. Ebona, a well-known Alaska Native leader, will serve his eighth term as RurAL CAP Board President, bringing his extensive experience to a demanding leadership role. A long-time member of the RurAL

CAP board, Ebona also served as President in 1983, 2004, and 2006

Ebona said, "I look forward to working toward RurAL CAP's mission to empower low-income Alaskans through advocacy, education, affordable housing and direct services that respect our unique values and cultures."

In addition to the election of Ebona as Board President, Steve Longley of Nome was elected Vice-President, and Olga M. Malutin of Kodiak as Secretary/Treasurer. Remaining Executive Committee members include Victoria Moore of Haines, Bernice Joseph of Fairbanks, and John Moller of Juneau. The RurAL CAP Board of Directors holds its annual meeting each December at its central office in Anchorage where officers are elected to a one-year term. A complete list of board members is available at www.ruralcap.com.

Nanooks shine at ACS tourney

Nome's boys and girls basketball teams started out the new year with a bang, posting impressive results at the annual ACS Tournament held in Anchorage Dec. 31 - Jan. 1.

Nanooks nabbed the two most valuable player awards with Christian Leckband taking the honor for the boys and Devynn Johnson winning the trophy for the girls. The boys also maintained their perfect record for the year by winning the tournament outright. The girls fought their way to second place, falling to Barrow in the final.

The Nanook boys' route to the championship came by way of victories over Eielson, host Anchorage Christian Schools and Seward. In addition to Leckband as MVP, longshot ace Tim Sullivan was also named to the all-tournament team.

The tournament win for the boys came after a defensive battle with Seward that ended with a 44-38 score in Nome's favor. The Nanooks gained a six-point advantage by the half and still held a narrow margin going into the final quarter. The Nanooks were able to outscore Seward 16-13 in the fourth to take the title. Leckband led Nome in the effort with 16 points, followed by Sullivan with 11. Nathan Blandford added seven points.

Nome's two earlier victories were more lopsided affairs with the Nanooks beating ACS in the second round 68-58 and winning its kick-off game against Eielson 68-56. Leckband had the hot hand for Nome in all three tournament games, scoring 30 against Eielson and 26 against ACS. Sullivan also put up solid numbers in each game, netting 21 in the opener, including five shots from the three-point zone. Sullivan scored 18 against ACS. Blandford and Jeremiah Johnson also consistently scored for Nome.

Girls stopped cold by Barrow

The Lady Nanooks enjoyed success at the Anchorage tournament until it met up with a Barrow team that couldn't miss. The Lady Whalers took the title after a 77-23 final.

Nome started the tourney with an even match against Eielson. The Lady Nanooks held a one-point lead going into the second half and were able to pad its lead through the third and fourth quarters, ending with a 31-25 victory. Johnson led the way with 15 points, followed by sister Dylan Johnson who put up seven points. Renee Lammer scored four in the win.

The Lady Nanooks wasted no time in its second game of the tournament, blasting out of the gate with a 14-6 first quarter against ACS. The early lead sealed the deal as the two teams played a relatively even game until the final buzzer. Nome won 46-36, led by Devynn Johnson's 19 points. Liz Sherman-Luce scored 11 followed by Taylor Pomeranz who put up eight points.

Nome just couldn't hold up against Barrows shooter who finished the game with 10 players having scored. When the dust settled, Barrow had a 54-point lead. Devynn Johnson again led the Lady Nanooks in scoring with 12 of Nome's points. Dylan Johnson scored six followed by Pomeranz who scored two.

Junior Native Youth Olympics athletes display promise

Submitted by Joni Earp

Ten members of Nome Elementary Junior Native Youth Olympics team displayed dedication and confidence as they met early Dec. 18, just as the 2010 Christmas break was starting

The JNYO team has been practicing their skills three days a week since the beginning of November. Nome has a long history of generating champions in the sport of NYO with world-record holders including Nicole Johnson, Calvin Bell, Elijah Cabinboy, Clinton Johnson and Chugie Keller.

Understanding the importance of commitment to the sport, coaches and community members have worked together to build a program that is responsive to the community. Hank Irelan, head coach of the Senior NYO team, has created a comprehensive program to build champions in the sport.

Joni Earp leads the junior team under the direction of Irelan. It is the goal of all of the coaches to not only build successful athletes, but to also instill a love of the sport and an understanding of its teaching of tradition Students learn goal setting and are exposed to cultural lessons during practice. The sport inherently incorporates sportsmanship and cooperation.

Athletes involved in the first junior competition of the year participated in six different events: the Alaskan High Kick, the Seal Hop, One-Foot High Kick, Two-Foot High Kick, Scissor Broad Jump and the Kneel Jump. All events were judged by standards used in statewide competitions. Students were required to display proper form and control during the events. In true NYO spirit, students pushed their limits and encouraged one another to perform their best as the morning progressed.

Ivory Okleasik and Kimberly Clark are returning members of the Nome Nanook Senior NYO team from last year's season. The girls gave competitors and spectators a great display of skill and tenacity. The girls have been leaders both on the gym floor and for their fellow classmates in school. Josh Bourdon, Michael Scott and Wilson Hoogendorn tested one another, going head to head in several of the events. The Tozier family (Eli, Abby and Zach) all displayed great leadership and sportsmanship. The family practices together and encourages one another to excel and do their best. Caitlin Tozier is a Senior NYO athlete and aids in evening practices. Catherine Scott and Delaney Johnson are new additions to the team and showed dedication as they participated in all of the morning's events. Robert Ahmasuk, age 3, attends all practices with his mother, Coach Earp, and insisted on participating in the Kneel Jump, inspiring humor and hope for future performance.

Keep a look out for more results as the team will compete in two weeks in a distance competition for the Alaska State NYO Meet held in Anchorage. The team will complete the events here in Nome at the elementary school gym beforehand, and coaches will submit results online. All interested community members are encouraged to attend and can look up team results and information on the team's Facebook page.

Coaches were impressed by the agrees and dedication to the and would like to thank family members present the morning of the competition. A big thank you is extended to the family of Marie and Tok Tozier for their commitment and dedication to building the program.

Patricia "Pat" Breeden

Patricia Breeden, 81, died December 24. She is survived by her four loving children and their families, Patrick Breeden of Spokane, his daughter Michele Denny; Kerry Thorson (Bill) and their four children Jeffrey, Jason, Joel (Angie), and Jerrad of Claremore, Oklahoma; Kelly Breeden (Janet deceased) and their three children Clinton (Larisa), Brandy (Jeremiah), and Andrea of Owasso, Oklahoma; Dan Breeden (Theresa) and their three children Aurora (Jeff) Tiara (Terry) and Lance of Anchorage; great-grandchildren Haden, Jace, Alexa, Gemma, Josiah, Orion and Sunny; her loving nieces Sharon Farnham, Patricia Bentley and family, Shannon Prichard and family and Annamga Sorority. Patricia is preceded in death by her husband Floyd, mother Mina Kay Smyth, father John Smyth Sr., brothers John, Dean, and Charles; sisters Sheila Gee, Nola Margret (Peggy) Gay.

Born in her family home, she lived in Spokane until 1974 when she and her family moved to Nome. She retired to Priest Lake, Idaho 19 years ago from Norton Sound Regional Hospital where she worked as the Human Resource director. Patricia was always thinking of others and was extremely generous, creative and kind. We were so blessed to have her for a mother, grandmother, aunt, and friend. She will be dearly missed.

By request of the deceased, a funeral was not held. There was a graveside service where she was laid to rest next to her husband, Floyd at Greenwood Memorial Terrace. In lieu of flowers please send memorial donations to Hospice House of Spokane, P.O. Box 2215, Spokane, WA 99210-2215.

Cecelia Aknealuk Redfox

Cecelia Aknealuk Redfox was born to Jacob and Mary Agnes Kameroff on December 26, 1933 in Old Hamilton, Alaska. Cecelia was raised in Kotlik, Aproka, Kwiguk and settled in Emmonak with her brothers Frank, Paul, Edmund and Thomas; sisters Bernadette, Laurencia and Alice. Her older sister Sophie remained in Kotlik. During her younger years before she got married, she was called to give a helping hand with her Aunt Pearly E (Kozevenikoff) Johnson to deliver babies like a health aide, but she was a midwife. This was all done by volunteering.

Cecelia married Alfred Redfox of Emmonak on March 16, 1958 and together they had six children: Elena (deceased) Christopher, Kathleen, Lena, Margaret and Thomas. They also raised Anna R. (Redfox) Lee during her younger years. So they both adopted her as one of their own. She and her husband raised all their children in a subsistence lifestyle.

During the summer, Cecelia spent a lot of time at fish camp with her husband and children where she engaged in a subsistence way of life. She taught her children how to cut and prepare salmon for the upcoming winter months and she liked to go out boating and berry picking. After her husband passed, she was still active in subsistence activities at her fish camp with her children and grandchildren.

During the long winter months, Cecelia stayed the majority of her time at home taking care of household chores. When her husband, son, daughter, grandchildren brought home any kind of wild game, she would prepare and put it away. Cecelia enjoyed attending and participating in traditional Eskimo dancing. She also enjoyed playing cards, especially solitary; traditional sewing; attending church services and playing bingo.

Cecelia is survived by her children and in-laws, Chris and Carol Redfox, Kathleen and Paul Andrews, Lena Redfox, Margaret Redfox, Thomas Redfox and Anna R. Lee. Grandchildren: Deanna Heckman, Christopher and Tasha Redfox, Jeremiah, Alfred, Willie and Kaylyn Andrews, Felicia Kamkoff, Kenneth Chaliak, Rile D K Redfox, Tonia, Tabitha, Donald and Travis Lee. Great Grandchildren: Desiree, Bryson, Sean, Kayln, Pierce, Howard, Kenyon and Claire. Sisters Bernadette Redfox, Laurencia and husband Raymond Waska, Sr., Alice and husband Simon Moses, sister in-laws Theresa, Molly and Dorothy Kameroff, Aunts Pauline Hunt, Maggie Charles and Uncle Johnny Thompson, Sr.

Cecelia is preceded in death by her husband Alfred, child Elena, grandchild Jerel Jacob Redfox, her parents Jacob and Mary Agnes Kameroff (Waskey and stepfather Peter Waskey) brothers Frank, Paul, Edmund and Thomas Kameroff; sister's Sophie Hunt and Angela Kameroff, brothers-in-law Paul, Charlie, Donald Redfox, Andy Hunt, Sr., sisters-in-law Natalia (Redfox) Moore, Mercedes and Angela Redfox and nieces and nephews too many to mention. We love and miss you all

The family of Cecelia A. Redfox thanks everyone for coming to provide comfort and support during our time of sorrow. They thank everyone who cooked and provided food for our family and guests. We would also like to give special and endless thanks to her nephews James M Kameroff, Douglas J Redfox, Peter Moore and Randy Hootch; her cousins Francis Thompson and Dominic Hunt for making her beautiful casket, outer box and cross; grave diggers: Ronald Waska, Jacob Waska, Joseph Kameroff, David Kameroff, Leon Kameroff, Jeremy Borkowski and Herman Hootch.

Special thanks to the following organizations for donations: Alaska Commercial Company and Company Store for groceries, Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Association for Transportation, City of Emmonak and Yukon Kuskokwim Heath Corporation for printing the obituary. To the priests and deacons who came to give evening prayers. Pat Tam for help of preparing the service schedule.

Special acknowledgment and great appreciation goes out to the staff at the Pearly E Johnson Subregional Clinic, Tabitha Lee, Norma Shorty, John Bird, Craig, Angela and Charlie for taking care of our Mom in her last three hours. We thank you from the bottom of our hearts. Thanks to Anna Lee, Antonia Kameroff and Norma Shorty for bathing and clothing our Beloved Mother. We would also like to thank her son, Thomas for completing her obituary. Big thanks to all who cooked, served, cleaned and stayed up with our Mom; you're too many to mention. You will receive your reward in heaven.

Cecelia Aknealuk Redfox

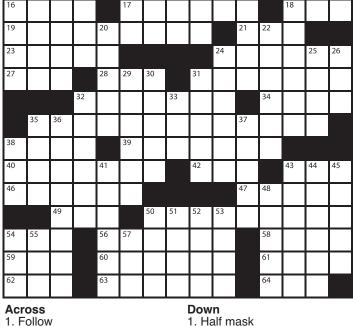

Albert Saccheus & LaVerne Anagick thanks you all for the prayers during the loss of our daughter, Ada Arlene Saccheus, without prayers we would not be where we are at today. Quyana, Pastor Joel & Olga, Nathan Toots, BSSD staff for the supplies for our daughter's cross & casket cover, Evergreen Memorial & staff, Dr. Head @ NSHC & Medevac team, Dr. Bowman & Dr. Bruzunas @ ANMC, Nurses @ ANMC, Health Aides in Elim, Kawerak Inc. for sending our daughter home to be buried & for the casket, Norton Sound Sled Dog Club, Native Village of Unalakleet, Pam Haugen, Melanie Sagoonick, Virginia & Chuck Degnan, Mike & Edna Saccheus, Kris Mashiana, UNK Covenant Congregation & many numerous congregations throughout AK & other states, Dave Cunningham, Gary Eckenwieler, UNK Health Aide staff, ANMC Specialty clinic staff, Dr. Boston-Ada's endocrinologist, family & friends & those that were not mentioned. Quyana Jesus for our short but blessed gift we received in our life, Ada shall be missed & loved by all, Quyana!

In connection with my mother Ellen Blount's life threatening health crisis, now vastly improved (mom is doing great - thank you), I express a big thank you to everybody involved during the very last days of December, 2010. More than one person were even out of town or on vacation and still helped out. To the Nome, Alaska based Norton Sound Regional Hospital doctors I say thank you for your quick and decisive actions in setting up the Medevac, as well as organizing her subsequent return travel back to Nome. And a big thank you to the numerous personnel and social services at QCC in helping out nursing wise and in relaying information back and forth to Anchorage. The Nome ambulance crew provided great transportation to and from the airport quickly and in a fancy cold weather "sleeping bag" – great and thank you. I hope you didn't miss out on too many New Year's festivities due to timing in the early morning. Lastly, a most certain big thank you to the Nome EMTs & Flight nurses, airborne as well as ground based, and further a big thank you to the pilot of the Bering Air twin: thanks to all of you for extending your "duty time" in Anchorage in order to facilitate transportation on New Year's eve itself thus missing out on the New Year's arrival family festivities while taking care of mom instead. All of this could not have been made possible without a super group of people getting together impromptu in order to help out a fellow human being in distress. Thank you tember as a physical assault case, being investigated by the APD Crimes Against Children unit.

During the interview of a 14 yearold victim, it was learned that the boy had been posting "personal ads" on line, asking for sex.

APD found out that a family friend, 20-year-old Brandin Carpenter, had sexually abused the 14-year-old minor. Detectives also learned that a 23-year-old man, Samuel Bair, had responded to the Craigslist ad, met the juvenile and had intercourse with him. Detectives then posed as the 14-year-old boy and posted a similar ad on Craigslist. Anchorage resident Yasin Soofizadeh, 26, and Anchorage resident Nathan Merkel, 49, responded to the ad and were arrested in November.

Police finished their investigation against the men who engaged in sex with the boy. Samuel Bair was arrested on December 23; Brandin Carpenter was arrested on December 22. The Anchorage Police Department is looking for any other possible victims related to this investigation, or anyone with information that could lead to the identification of other victims of these crimes.

Anchorage police looking for child molester

Detectives from the Crimes Against Children are looking for 51year-old Anchorage resident David Robbins. A parent of a 10-year-old girl reported that he had inappropriately touched her daughter. Detectives learned that Robbins lured children by allowing them to play on his trampoline, and frequently invited them into his home for snacks and to play games. Robbins has lived in North Muldoon for several years, but police are unable to locate the wanted man. Detectives believe there may be additional victims and are urging people to come forward.

Anchorage music teacher arrested for sexual abuse of minor

On Christmas Eve, a West High School music student told Anchorage Police Department that she was sexually abused by her choral music teacher, 29-year-old Christopher More. APD say that More had multiple sexual encounters with both the complainant and another choral student. More was arrested on January 2 and charged with multiple counts of Sexual Abuse of a Minor with bail set at $100,000.

Detectives believe that More may have sexually abused other victims and are asking anyone with information to contact APD. More has previously taught at Willowa Elementary, Romig Middle School, West High School and previously part-time in the Mat-Su School District. He was also active in a local church.

Court rules Ribbon Seals not endangered

The U.S. District Court in Northern California upheld a decision by the National Marine Fisheries Service not to list the ribbon seal as threatened or endangered under the Endangered Species Act. The Center for Biological Diversity and Greenpeace sued NMFS based on the argument that the seals faced potential habitat loss from sea ice conditions in the sub-Arctic, including the Bering Sea.

BOEMRE plans meetings on OCS lease sale plans

The federal Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement is holding a series of public scoping meetings in February 2011 on the Programmatic Environmental Impact Statement for the proposed 2012-2017 Outer Continental Shelf Oil and Gas Leasing Program. This is part of an updated oil and gas leasing strategy put forth by the Secretary of the Interior.

The final PEIS covers areas in the Central and Western Gulf of Mexico along with a small portion of the Eastern Gulf and Alaska's Chukchi and Beaufort Seas and Cook Inlet. Public hearings are planned for Anchorage, Kotzebue, Point Hope, Point Lay, Wainwright, Barrow, Nuiqsut and Kaktovik.

Superior Court judges retained

AP—Alaska's four presiding Superior Court judges will retain their positions for 2011. Supreme Court Chief Justice Walter Carpeneti announced Thursday that Judge Patricia Collins will preside over the First Judicial District, which covers Southeast Alaska. Judge Ben Esch will oversee the Second Judicial District, which covers Alaska's most northern areas and includes Superior Courts in Barrow, Nome and Kotzebue.

Judge Sharon Gleason will remain presiding judge for the Third Judicial District, covering Anchorage and Southcentral Alaska. Judge Douglas Blankenship of Fairbanks will preside over the Fourth Judicial District, which covers the Interior and parts of southwest Alaska. Chief justice Carpeneti also reappointed Judge Robert Coats as chief justice of the Alaska Court of Appeals. Coats has served on the Appeals Court since it was created in 1980.

EPA board stops Shell's Arctic clean air permits

AP— Alaska Native and conservation groups have succeeded in challenging clean air permits granted to Shell Oil to drill exploration wells in the Beaufort and Chukchi seas. Shell hopes to drill one exploratory well in the Beaufort this summer and perhaps proceed with plans to drill in the Chukchi if legal challenges to the leases there can be resolved. But Shell spokesman Curtis Smith said without the clean air permits the company can't proceed with its drilling plans in 2011.

Numerous groups alleged that Shell's permits granted by the Environmental Protection Agency would allow Shell to emit tons of pollutants into the Arctic environment from a drill ship and support vessels. The federal Environmental Appeals Board, which is part of the EPA, reviewed the permits. It found last week that the analysis of the impact of nitrogen dioxide emissions from the ships on Alaska Native communities was too limited, and remanded the permits so that problems cited by the board could be fixed by the agency.

Week ending 1/3/11
On December 16, 2010 at approximately 5:20 a.m. the Alaska State Troopers received a report that Kenneth Lee, 22, of Teller, left Brevig Mission at midnight on his way to Teller, but never made it at midnight on his way to Teller, but never made it to the nearby village. A hasty search within the villages of Teller and Brevig Mission was done, however, Kenny Lee, was not located. Kenny Lee was dressed appropriately for the weather. Lee was reported to have asked about traveling directly between the villages over Port Clarence ice and was advised not to do so as a snow machine and rider were lost through the ice several weeks prior. Hasty teams from Brevig Mission and Teller searched the area snow machine trails. Local air-lines were notified to look for a lone snow machine in the area of Teller and Brevig Mission. On December 16, at approximately 1:13 p.m. a Navajo charter took off from Nome with spotters on board for the aerial search. At approximately 2:00 p.m. the charter had to turn around and return to Nome because of weather. Kenny Lee was not located. forund searchers continued searching, but have not located Kenny Lee. On December 18, two search teams from Brevig Mission and Teller continued to try to locate or find any signs of Kenny Lee. The search thus far has not resulted in any sign of Kenny Lee. The weather continued to be treather to the treather the search thus far has not resulted in any sign of Kenny Lee. The weather continued to be sign of Refinity Lee. The weather Continued to be troublesome with high winds, heavy snow and periodic ground storms. Due to weather conditions aerial assets were not usable. Ground teams continued to search the area. On December 23, AST charted an aircraft from Bering Air and spotters from Nome Volunteer Search and rescue group were on board to conduct an aerial search between Brevig Mission and Teller. No signs of Lee were located. On December 24, after more than a week searching for Lee without success and all clues indicating that the highest probabil-ity of location is in the water, AST suspended ity of location is in the water, AST suspended search and recovery efforts in this case. Trp. Stroebele responded to Teller to visit with searchers and family members to discuss search efforts and the reasoning for suspension of the search. If additional investigative information is received that increases the likelihood of recovery AST will resume search and recovery efforts. Anyone with additional information is asked to contact the AST Nome Post at 907-443-2835. Nome AST would like to thank the volunteer searchers from Teller, Frevig Mission, Shishmaref, and Nome Search and Rescue groups for their efforts in this Search and Rescue mission.

N500KM. You can verify all of this with him; he still lives there although he no longer flies. So until the incentive increases, Evergreen will sit on it. Varnadoe is a fool; flying a Jet Ranger out there is not safe and I would have refused to do it. Not just for passenger safety, but for my own. Think Evergreen is hurting for money? How is it that they can purchase new aircraft for lucrative government contracts in Afghanistan? I saw them over there with my own eyes. This is not about what Evergreen can provide for service to Diomede. Fact of the matter is, all of the passengers could be accommodated with an extra sortie on mail day with the BO-105. But that would be cost effective.

Most importantly, isn't it about time that the Diomeders started fending for themselves? According to their embellished legend, they have been surviving/ subsisting out there "for thousands of years." Not quite, but they have been there before helicopter service. How did they do it?

Why cannot they do it now?

How about a reality check. How much revenue does the state and federal government pour into that dysfunctional community every year? Think not? Then interview the family services and law enforcement personnel who have to deal with them. What does it cost to run the school every year? How many diplomas have been issued over the last 10 years? As one of their school principals once told me, those people have a warped sense of entitlement. So true. How deep would the federal deficit be if all the citizens in this state received the kind of dole-out money that they do on Diomede? Enable them, stop mollycoddling them. Let their corporation obtain a real boat for them. Let them work on improving their harbor. Qualify them to handle their own mail. Let them transport themselves and earn some self respect. Bering Air can still fly in there during the dead of winter. Too hard? Then let them deal with it or move off the island and make a living like the rest of us have to do.

Pursue the American dream, work for it and earn it on your own merits; not on mine, thank you very much. One last thing: they will cry for everything that they can get or want, but they will curse "you white people" behind your back for their situation. That is the reality of it, and you can take that to the bank. While you still have something there, that is. Thank you for your time.

Have a great holiday.

Respectfully, S. Kirchner Wasilla, AK

Dear Editor, I want to extend my profound gratitude to the people of Nome, particularly the members of the Search and Rescue community who rallied together with professionalism and competence and found my son Cody and his friend who were lost for two days while traveling from Teller to Nome in that terrible blizzard over Christmas. I would also extend my gratitude to Joe Garnie and his team

Dear Editor,

I have a real problem with a set of people that are so concerned only with kids in school not smoking cigarettes and showing up on time each day!

No matter where you look in the school you see signs that say don't smoke CIGARETTES and nothing

While at the same time they are hiring and maintaining staff that use drugs and alcohol on a daily basis and some even sale them.

Not only is this a problem but the sales are to the very kids that they should be very concerned about.

How are we to teach these children anything when we show them one thing and teach them another?

Are we not just confusing the situation in their growing minds?

Some of these employees have worked with the school in high profile jobs for a very long time and get awards for such work. (I wonder what type of award will be given out for the most drugs or alcohol sold to our students in a year.)

It is so hard for me to understand why it is that to work at almost any job nowadays "Drug & Alcohol Testing" is mandatory.

So why is it not mandatory for those that work with and teach our young children?

Do we think so little of them, that just anyone can work with them and

I brought this matter up to those in charge over a year ago and was told that this would be looked into.

Now over a year later we see that not one word of what I was told was true and not one ounce of concern was wasted on this matter.

Why do you think this is— are drugs and alcohol so important to those in charge and making decisions that they are afraid to confront these

I know for a fact that some of the school board personnel are involved in the sale and delivery of drugs and alcohol in this area and others.

As parents and grandparents we all should be asking these very questions of district personnel and board members.

Or is the lack of concern easier to live with?

This has a very big area of effect on our next generation of village leaders and future elders. What will they teach their children?

Our village leaders and council members are only concerned with how much money they can mishandle or outright steal and not the children and that in itself helps to foster the schools lack of concern.

Don't smoke cigarettes but use all the drugs and alcohol you want as that is not a problem.

I find this very disturbing and hard to live with. I have grandchildren in the school system now.

Wake up and make them start drug and alcohol testing now. Daniel L. Richard, Sr. Wales, Alaska

Wehde declines to accept 1-year contract

By Tyler Rhodes

After being offered a contract that was essentially chopped in half, Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde declined to accept the deal from the Nome Board of Education Jan. 11, setting up the district again for turnover in its administrative ranks.

Approximately an hour after the meeting, board member Barb Nickels sent out an e-mail to Nome media outlets that she planned to resign from the board as a result of the decision. While the e-mail said she would be tendering her resignation the next day, Nickels later retreated from the statement, saying she was reconsidering the decision. As of press time Tuesday, she appeared to still be on the fence. If Nickels does resign, the remaining board members would appoint someone to the empty seat until the October municipal elections.

Wehde's tenure with the district will come to an end June 30. "They offered me a one-year contract, and I respectfully declined," Wehde told the handful of people still at the Jan.

While the Nome Board of Education was met with rejection when it offered a shortened contract to superintendent Jon Wehde (see above story), it did approve the contracts of the members of his administrative leadership team at the Jan. 11 meeting.

Contracts were approved for high school principal Steve Gast; vice principal Carmen Russo; elementary principal David Keller; charter school principal and lead teacher Todd Hindman; director of instruction, federal programs and accountability Jon Berkeley; coordinator of curriculum and assessment Janeen Sullivan; technology director Robin Johnson; and special education coordinator Sandra Harvey.

Eugene Asicksik wins Shaktoolik's seat on NSEDC board

Shaktoolik voters selected Eugene Asicksik as their representative on the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors in a special election held Jan. 11. Asicksik defeated long-time incumbent board member Harvey Sookiayak by a vote of 55 to 49, reports City Clerk Rita Auliye.

Asicksik formerly served as president and chief executive officer of NSEDC. He resigned from the company as CEO in December 2007 and moved from Anchorage to Shaktoolik, where he was born and raised.

A special municipal election for two seats on the Shaktoolik City Council also was held on Jan. 11. Auliye said Asicksik received 43 votes as a write-in candidate for City Council Seat C, compared to 34 votes for incumbent

Council considers hiring planning consultant

By Laurie McNichola

City Manager Josie Bahnke arranged a teleconference with Caryn Tilton of Caryn Tilton Consulting LLC and the Nome Common Council to discuss strategic planning for local governance at a work session on Jan. 12.

Bahnke said during her annual performance evaluation last year, the council asked her to put in place a strategic plan and performance evaluation process. She said she asked Tilton to present the System Integration Program developed by her Oregon firm to the council after hearing Tilton speak at an Alaska Municipal League conference.

Tilton provided council members with visual aids—a handout summarizing the program and images of program materials projected onto a screen—to accompany her description of the System Integration Program and its benefits.

Tilton said in 2004 her firm began to develop and test strategies and methods to assure accountability in local government. Noting that she has worked for 25 years with every local government department from police to public works, she said it became clear to her that local governments need to depart from a standard way of doing things to meet long-standing challenges. She said her company also has developed an online training program for local government employees.

Tilton summarized the System Integration Program as follows: The council would create policy that

Letters -

Dear Editor: Maggie to the rescue..

Back in Nov. 2007, I wrote a humorous but serious letter to the editor about the ineptness of the Alaska National Guard. After a year long deployment in the desert, they forgot to bring us home. Only the angry calls to the Governor and Senators prompted them to eventually find a way to bring home over six hundred Alaskan soldiers forgotten about down in Camp Shelby, MS. During this exact time frame "they" in their infinite wisdom decided it was more important to fly Maggie the elephant to California aboard an Alaska Air Guard aircraft. I am still in shock that they chose to abandon their troops in lieu of a PR stunt. I don't blame Maggie, though; instead I applaud her ability to secure transportation from the Alaska National Guard when even soldiers couldn't. In fact I suggested that the Alaska National Guard hire Maggie to schedule transportation for all their troops since they have no idea how to do it themphant to run their supply department. She is the only one who can make a difference. Until this happens, I would be turning to Maggie again for help. Seems when she left Alaska, her travel was cleared and she found a peaceful new home in sunny California. To my surprise, four years after being cleared and honorably discharged from the Alaska National Guard, they have turned me over to a collection agency. They say I must pay for field gear. The list is ridiculous, even including a pair of size 8 boots. Anyone who has seen me knows I wear size 14! Alaska is full of veterans, and they all know when you get your DD214 and walk away for the last time they aren't going to let you leave without turning in your gear. I have a supervisor's signature on my clearance papers. I'm positive this supervisor who signed that I was cleared for discharge personally verified everything they signed their name to, especially that block which states soldier turned in his gear. I am calling on the Alaska National Guard to clear my name, recall the collection notice, and hire Maggie the elestrongly encourage all future applicants to avoid the kind of disaster I find myself in and consider a different military organization to join. Josh Czech

Little did I know years later I

Dear Editor,

I am fortunate enough to be able to see such a beautiful sunrise out of my front window. Just as I am fortunate enough to meet so many beautiful people in my lifetime. To me—every one of you are beautiful and it is a pleasure to meet you.

I hope you all have a wonderful year and remember we learn something new every day and it's wonderful to learn things. I keep trying to tell the kids that once they learn something (and do the work for that subject) they shouldn't have to think of it much again. So try to stress it to the kids for me, huh.

My son and I were discussing how there always seems to be dust and I told him that it was a part of lifejust like having to lug around seven years of paper work for the IRS. Maybe I could see keeping the paper work for four to five years. But do you know what a pain it is to carry baggage like that when you're moving? Especially when the IRS should already have the paper work on file, since that's what you sent in, right? I know—if they want it so bad—then we should be able to ship it to them somewhere for safe keeping.

Seriously, Alaska should form its own nation. We have our own resources. We are fortunate enough to have access to animals and berries and greens-all of which are important to us and which we would like our future children to have access to. We-As a nation-could make our own rules as to how we want our state to be run. And we will learn from our/their mistakes.

Admittedly, we are in a depression, so most of us only get one channel on TV. Admittedly too, there are a lot of us who say maybe they should change some of the shows, but we'd like our CSIs and Law and Order shows back too. We would also not like to have to watch reruns of them,-there are other series that are just as interesting. Maybe we need to write to the station—if I had the address, you would know it. Change is good.

The only shame I have is the quarterly pay the Government wants you to pay; otherwise there are so many different things I could do, but oh well, so I do it for free. It is good to help out people anyway.

Take care, you all. As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Grand Ol' Tradition

The Inaugural Ball is an occasion where Democrats and Republicans put aside their political differences and celebrate the start of the newly elected governor's term in office. There is good food, good music, dancing and fun. Tuxedoes, ball gowns, Carhartts, mukluks and bunny boots have been accepted attire in years past. Hub communities from around the state- Nome, Anchorage, Fairbanks, Juneau have enjoyed the celebration.

The Inaugural Ball this year is set to reflect the culture of the community. This year in Nome it is face painting. Yep! Face painting and other fun things for kids. Hey, we already had the Firemen's Carnival and we don't have a Chucky Cheese in Nome. Face painting is not on the schedule in Anchorage, Juneau or Fairbanks. Is this the Republican version of bite the bullet? Why bother? Oh wait! There is a reception at St. Joe's by invitation only. Are they serving tea? Even Sarah knew how to have a ball.

Governor Parnell needs to learn how to loosen up and have fun. Nomeites, Democrats, Republicans and Independents like to dress up or down and dance to good music. So what's with the face painting? Does Parnell think so little of Nome that he can't host a decent Inaugural Ball? If money is the issue why did the Gov get a hefty salary increase this year? Face painting, indeed. - N.L.M.-

Compiled by Diana Haecker Oil flows again with reopening of Alaska pipeline

AP— Oil began flowing again Monday through the trans-Alaska pipeline after workers installed a pipe to bypass a leak at a pump house station on the North Slope. The pipeline was carrying about 630,000 barrels a day before the leak was discovered on Jan. 8 in an underground pipe encased in concrete. The pipeline delivers about 13 percent of the nation's daily domestic oil production to tankers for West Coast delivery. The oil began flowing again after crews completed a 157-foot bypass. "It is a complicated process," said Rachel Baker-Sears, a spokeswoman for the Joint Information Center set up in Fairbanks to handle the crisis. She said the restart went smoothly, but it could take a few days for the pipeline to return to previous pumping levels.

Woman survives having throat cut in Kotzebue

Kotzebue police say 38-year-old woman survived having her throat slit, and her boyfriend has been charged with attempted murder. The Anchorage Daily News reports that officers found 38-year-old Eva Snyder covered in blood with a 4-inch gash across her throat on Jan. 7. Charging documents say she told investigators that she and her boyfriend had been partying at her house when he suddenly said he was going to kill her.

Investigators said the boyfriend, 41-year-old Montgomery J. Ferguson, later showed up at his brother's apartment with dried blood on his hands saying he'd killed his girlfriend by cutting her throat. Ferguson's brother called the police.

Shelter rescues 157 huskies, breeder jailed

The Mat-Su animal care shelter is bursting at its seams as last week an influx of 157 malnourished and dehydrated dogs arrived at the Palmer facility.

Animal control and Troopers were serving a search warrant to dog breeder Frank Rich, 53. They seized the animals, but came too late to help 19 animals, which were already dead of starvation. Rich was arrested and charged with 50 counts of cruelty to animals. The dogs are at the shelter and are being cared for with food and IV fluids. There were also 30 puppies of varying ages, including some newborns. Shelter employees and volunteers had to work non-stop to build new doghouses and kennels to house all the dogs. Prompted by the heartbreaking story, Alaskans donated money, building materials and dog food to the Mat-Su animal shelter.

Feds sued from all sides over polar bear critical habitat

The Department of Interior's Secretary Ken Salazar is getting letters of intent to sue over the department's polar bear critical habitat designation from conservationists, native groups and oil drilling proponents - all for different reasons. The Center for Biological Diversity notified Salazar that it intends to sue the Interior Department for its failure to protect polar bear critical habitat from harmful oil and gas development in Alaska. The Center is demanding that the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement, Bureau of Land Management and U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service all agencies within the Interior Department — immediately analyze the impacts of drilling for oil in the polar bears' protected habitat and take measures to avoid such impacts.

This week the National Commission on the BP Deepwater Horizon and Offshore Drilling released a report concluding that the oil industry is not prepared to deal with a large spill in the Arctic and recommending that no drilling be allowed to go forward until the industry can demonstrate the ability to clean up spills in the harsh conditions of the Arctic Ocean.

The Arctic Slope Regional Corp. and the North Slope Borough also said that they and other Native groups plan to sue the federal government over the same habitat designation. They say that the feds illegally ignored Alaska Native concerns when they made the habitat designation. According to the Anchorage Daily News, the coalition of Alaska Native groups also involves Bering Straits Native Corp, NANA Regional Corp. from Kotzebue, Calista Corp. from Bethel, the North Slope Borough, the Inupiat Community of the Arctic Slope and the village corporations for Kaktovik, Nuiqsut, Barrow, Wainwright, Point Lay and Point Hope.

In December, the State of Alaska notified Interior of its intent to sue. The state contends that additional regulations and consultations and litigation triggered by this habitat designation would delay jobs, increase the costs and even prevent resource development projects.

Salmon and trout contribute almost $1 billion to AK economy, study finds

A study commissioned by Trout Unlimited found that the combined value of commercial, sport, subsistence and hatchery fisheries in Southeast Alaska's healthy salmon and trout populations pump nearly $1 billion into the local economy every year and account for more than one in ten jobs.

This is the first study that takes a combined look at the economic value of all four sectors of the region's salmonid fisheries - commercial, sport, subsistence/personal use and hatchery production. Although past timber harvesting has degraded fish habitat in some Southeast Alaska watersheds, Southeast still supports a disproportionately high share of the wild stocks of trout and salmon remaining in the Pacific Northwest. Limiting habitat degradation, restoring impacted streams and riparian areas and minimizing the negative impacts of climate change will be key to continuing Southeast Alaska's salmon success story. The study was conducted by economist Thomas Wegge of TCW Economics.

Myron Savetilik. Seven votes were cast for other write-in candidates for Seat C, she added.

Auliye said the city will schedule a runoff election between Asicksik and Savetilik for Seat C because neither candidate received a number of votes greater than 40 percent of the 109 total votes cast for all candidates in the election. Asicksik's 43 write-in votes gave him 39.4 percent of the total votes cast.

Auliye said Fred Sagoonick defeated incumbent Edgar Jackson in the race for City Council Seat F by a vote of 46 to 43, and five write-in votes were cast in the race. Jackson has served as mayor of Shaktoolik for a number of years. The city's mayor is selected by and from the council.

The names of two voters who cast questioned ballots will be sent to the Division of Elections to determine whether they are eligible to vote, Auliye reports. She said nine of the 109 ballots cast by registered voters in the municipal in the election were spoiled.

The city held special elections for the NSEDC and council seats on Jan. 11 because 15 questioned ballots that were cast in the elections held Oct. 5 were thrown into the official ballot box and counted, according to Leroy Seppilu, local government specialist with the Alaska Division of Community and Regional Affairs. Seppilu, who consulted with city officials at their request concerning the Oct. 5 municipal election, said the questioned ballots should have been placed in questioned ballot envelopes per city ordinance. Noting that election judges sometimes don't know how to handle questioned ballots, he said they knew enough to get the names of the 15 voters who were not on the registration list.

Auliye sent the names of the 15 voters who cast questioned ballots to the Division of Elections, which found that three of them were eligible to vote and 12 were not, Seppilu said. The voter registration deadline is 30 days before an election for most state and municipal elections in Alaska.

A Shaktoolik voter contested the elections held Oct. 5, and on Nov. 5 the Shaktoolik City Council decided not to certify them. In the Oct. 5 elections, Asicksik and Sookiayak tied 54-54 for the NSEDC seat; Savetilik drew 73 votes for Council Seat C, compared to far fewer votes for various write-in candidates; and Sagoonick outpolled Jackson by a vote of 63-43 for Council Seat F.

Seppilu said he provided city officials with a request form to fill out and send to the U.S. Department of Justice for pre-clearance to schedule a special municipal election. The department asks for 60 days to review and respond to the request.

Alaska is among several states for which preclearance for special elections other than runoff elections is required for municipalities under the National Voting Rights Act of 1965. Seppilu said that when Alaska was a territory, its voter eligibility laws included a discriminatory requirement that voters know how to speak and write in English.

clearly defines authority, direction and control. Based on the council's policies a mission statement and goals would be developed so the council, management team and other city employees all work from one set of goals. The council policies would not need revision from year to year, but an annual performance plan would be developed to meet goals. A road map would be created to show what the entire city is to accomplish.

Tilton said the process helps to create an adult environment in city government that is preferable to a parent-child environment and enables the council to avoid micromanagement. The roadmap would include a chart of goals in the annual performance plans with color-coded blocks that show whether a goal has been met, she explained.

Tilton said the council would consider a roadmap of policies in four areas under the System Integration Program: (1) council process policies; (2) council-city manager relationship policies that show how authority is delegated and how its proper use is monitored; (3) city manager accountability policies that show the constraints on the city manager's authority and establish the practical, ethical and legal boundaries within which all staff activity and decision-making will take place and be monitored; and (4) strategic direction policies that show what the council intends for the city to achieve.

Councilman Stan Andersen said Nome Public Schools and Nome Joint Utility System are under the city's umbrella, and he asked if the city will need mission statements from them. Tilton said their mission statements would be different from that of the city, but their boards could participate with the council in the System Integration Program process if the council decides to bring her to Nome.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked whether the council or the city manager would approve the city budget under the System Integration Program. "It's tied in with the budget; the council approves it," Tilton replied.

Tilton said the first year for the annual performance plan is a practice year. Knodel asked whether the council would review the first performance plan before developing a plan for the following year. "The review of last year happens after the adoption of next year," Tilton said. Any goals in last year's plan that were not achieved would be colorcoded in red, she added.

Performance evaluations

Andersen asked whether the council or public is privy to annual performance reviews for city employees other than the city manager. "Check your state statute," Tilton suggested. "We address that in Oregon."

Andersen said he has requested but not received information about an employee evaluation. Nome has a city manager form of government, and the responsibilities of the city manager are defined, he added. Tilton asked why a low performing employee would still be employed. She said the council wants the city manager to be responsible for hiring and firing, so if council members are not happy with the performance of a subordinate of the city manager, they should go to the city manager, not the subordinate.

Bahnke said, "Personnel files are confidential, and if you want a law-suit...." Andersen said he differs with Bahnke based on his reading of the city's employee handbook.

"The statute would deal with the general public, not the council," Tilton said. "If I work with you, I will help you with that.... Focus on outcomes, not how they get there. Your leverage is to hold the city manager accountable."

Tilton said the annual performance plan is Bahnke's tool for sitting with her management team and checking progress.

"We are reviewing plans with department heads this week, though not in your format," Bahnke said.

"Sit with your employees, review accomplishments in the last year and make a plan for next year," Tilton said. "That's much more productive than a discipline session."

Noting that the council has a copy of the city's contract with union employees, Andersen said the performance review requires that employees get 60 out of 100 points to get an annual raise, so if they show up most of the time, they pass.

Tilton said she would advise the council to develop a policy for an effective performance review and then use it to see if it works. Bahnke said there is no performance evaluation tool for classified employees. Andersen said there is such a tool, and he advised Bahnke to dig around.

"I never had it," Bahnke replied.
"It's there," Andersen insisted.
"It's never used."

Councilman Jim West Jr. asked how the city should manage volunteers.

"The same way you manage other people," Tilton replied. "Tell them what is expected and provide feedback on their performance. Have one performance review for volunteers, one for employees." She offered to provide the council with samples of performance reviews. If the city has had a performance review tool for a long time, it's time to revise it, she added.

In regard to evaluating the performance of the city manager, Tilton advised against using a numeral rating system such as 1 to 5. "Did the city manager complete everything on the annual performance plan?" she asked. Under Tilton's program, the city manager sends a review assessment to 10 to 20 people with whom she frequently works, including city department heads. They complete the survey forms, the city manager gets them back when they are done, and the results are confidential, Tilton said.

"Why eliminate the council?" Andersen asked.

"[The council] can participate at long as you know what she does," Tilton replied.

Andersen said the survey would be valuable only if the respondent is an honest person. He said he's not sure how to weigh reviews from department heads who depend on a performance review by the city manager.

Tilton said the survey is confidential and entirely electronic, with results compiled by computer in Texas.

"The council could sign off on the people it went to," Bahnke said. "Yes," Tilton replied.

"You do get a final report," Tilton assured the council. She said results of the survey are quantifiable in areas such as the city manager's top strengths, and the survey takes the evaluation out of a personal realm. "Responders can write in comments," she added. "I would take and put them into a summary rather than see individual comments, because in a controversy you can tell where they came from."

Cost of Tilton's services

"How much do you cost?" Andersen asked Tilton.

"$2,000 a day if the city brings me up [to Nome]," Tilton replied. She suggested that other boards participate with the council to share the cost.

"How much if we do it this way?" Andersen asked.

"$240 an hour," Tilton said. She said if she spends a day with council members and city management staff, the city will have a template for a strategic plan when she leaves. Then she would check back quarterly, which can be done on the web by sharing reports, she added. Tilton said she will send Bahnke a web link to an overview of topics she covered with the council during the teleconference.

Andersen suggested asking the Nome Board of Education and the utility board to join the council in a strategic planning session with Tilton. Bahnke noted that Nome Public Schools recently developed a strategic plan.

Bahnke asked council members to review and comment on the council policies chapter in the Nome Code of Ordinances. She said the ordinance may need revision if the council adopts the processes described by Tilton.

The work session ran more than an hour and was attended by six council members. Mayor Denise Michels was absent.

Judge OKs release of woman accused of murder

Olanna will be allowed to stay at women's shelter

By Tyler Rhodes

A Brevig Mission woman charged with murder in the stabbing death of her husband will be allowed to stay at the women's shelter in Nome while her case is pending.

Superior Court Judge Ben Esch agreed to the defense's request Jan. 13 to allow Jessica Olanna to stay at the Bering Strait Women's Group shelter over the objection of the prosecution. Olanna, 29, is charged with first- and second-degree murder, as well as manslaughter, in the death of 35-year-old Andrew Tocktoo. An Alaska State Trooper report alleges Olanna stabbed Tocktoo in the back of the neck in the early hours of Nov. 30 at their home in Brevig Mission.

Esch will allow Olanna to stay at the shelter with her two youngest children, a 9-month-old and 2-year-old, after posting a $2,500 cash bail. The judge ordered that Olanna have no contact with her older children nor have access to a telephone while at the shelter or outside the facility. Olanna will also be required to abide by a 10 p.m. curfew and will have to be escorted by shelter staff when she leaves the building. "This is the perfect place for her to be," said Olanna's lawyer Angela Greene. Greene is the supervising attorney for the Nome office of the state Public Defender Agency.

District Attorney John Earthman argued against the release of Olanna, trying to persuade Esch that the defendant poses a threat to the community and would be at risk of contacting her older children, who will likely be called as witnesses should the case go to trial. Olanna and Tocktoo's six children, ranging in ages from 9 months to 11 years old, were home at the time of the stabbing on Nov. 30. The Trooper report indicated Tocktoo was talking to the children, who were in bed, at the time he was fatally stabbed. "The women's shelter is a fine place for what they do," Earthman said. "But they're not a correctional facility. They're not a secure facility. They're not a third-party custodian."

Earthman argued that at the facility, Olanna would not be able to be stopped from making calls back to Brevig Mission if she wished, possibly contacting witnesses. The district attorney also said a sworn statement by Olanna in the case showed that she was dangerous. "I don't think it's safe to place children with her at this time," he said.

Earthman's allegations over the risk of letting Olanna out of jail spurred public defender Greene to offer a long retort, giving a hint at what Olanna's defense may look like if the case goes to trial. "If we're going to talk about the facts, then we'll go through the facts," she said before running through a series of events that she argued showed Olanna was acting in self-defense. "The information we have obtained so far tells a different story than of a woman who was plotting the death of her husband as revenge."

Greene proceeded to describe the Olanna-Tocktoo household, alleging it a place where the mother and children suffered from abuse and feared for their safety. "There's a history of abuse in this case that goes back 10 years," Greene told Judge Esch. "Ms. Olanna does not have a history of abuse."

Greene said 24 hours before his death, Tocktoo threw the entire family out of the house except two of the older children. She said Olanna returned the next morning to get one of the children off to school and returned later to get another child. That evening Greene said it appeared the couple did not eat dinner but instead bought a bottle of R&R whiskey for $100. Greene said Tocktoo was fixated on the belief that one of his daughters did not look like him.

Before Tocktoo was stabbed later that night, Greene said Olanna called the village police officer to say she was going to kill her husband if he kept beating their children. Greene said the officer monitored the house from the outside but did not try to go in.

Greene continued to recount the defense's version of the events, saying that around 4 a.m. Tocktoo head-butted the child he believed did not look like him. Greene said Tocktoo then spat on, head-butted and boxed Olanna. It was around 4:15 a.m., Nov. 30 when Troopers received the report of Tocktoo's death. Greene said, as did a Trooper's report, that Olanna had one of her children call the Troopers to report the death.

In addition to the alleged abuse inflicted upon her by her husband, Greene also contended Olanna was kicked and beaten by a relative of Tocktoo's before she was taken into Trooper custody after the killing. "There is no doubt of bruising on [Olanna's] forehead, bruising on her body." Greene said bruising on her body," Greene said.

District Attorney Earthman argued that Greene was being selective in her presentation of the facts. "That's picking and choosing evidence," he said. Earthman went on to suggest Olanna had planned the attack in advance with her children to support his argument that she not be allowed to be released to the shelter. "Anyone who enlists their children to help murder their father is a danger to the community," he said.

Greene countered that Earthman's supposition was based on statements made by Tocktoo's mother. Before Greene could argue further, Esch ruled on her request. Despite noting his concern about Olanna contacting her older children, Esch agreed to allow her to stay at the shelter.

The next scheduled action in Olanna's case is an omnibus hearing slated for Feb. 14 at 8:30 a.m. A calendar call is schedule for 9 a.m. March 14.

Governor declares state disaster for Savoonga

By Diana Haecker

Gov. Sean Parnell declared a state disaster for the storm that pummeled Savoonga between Dec. 26 and Jan. 6, causing widespread power outages, which in turn resulted in frozen homes and burst pipes.

A rare combination of open ocean water and heavy winds caused salt spray to deposit on power lines. The salt caused arcing and interrupted the power supply to the majority of the village. As a result of freezing temperatures, water and sewer lines froze, ruptured, and flooded the interior of privately owned homes, public buildings and regional housing authority properties. About 147 people sought refuge in the school, the local emergency shelter.

As the community is picking up the pieces after the disastrous weather event, plumbers were flown in from Nome, Anchorage and Bethel to fix the homes, businesses, clinic and the Headstart building. Savoonga Mayor Myron Kingeekuk said on Sunday that he got word that the governor declared the event a state disaster. Kingeekuk said that next week more state workers would come to Savoonga to interview homeowners about damages to their residences. Kingeekuk said that he knows of at least two homes that sustained significant damage when pipes burst and ruined the entire flooring of the building.

The disaster declaration authorizes the Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management to activate the state's Public and Individual Disaster Assistance grant programs.

"The community performed admirably during the power outage and subsequent shelter effort," Parnell said. "Activation of the state's Public and Individual Assistance programs will enable the state to provide grant funding to individual households for damages to their homes and property and help restore public facilities to a pre-disaster condition."

The state's public assistance program helps state, local and tribal governmental entities, and private nonprofit organizations to restore infrastructure damaged by one specific event to pre-disaster conditions. The maximum amount to be paid out for individual assistance is $15,100.

In its last update, the Alaska Village Electric Cooperative's chief executive officer and president Meera Kohler said that there have been no further unscheduled outages in Savoonga since Jan. 3. Kohler wrote in an e-mail that two linemen were still there last week to power-wash power lines and other hardware. She added that two transformers remain out of service due to damaged insulators caused by arcing. Those transformers will be repaired onsite and were replaced with spare transformers that AVEC had in inventory in Savoonga.

Kohler said that AVEC has plans to share the knowledge gained from the storm. "We are preparing a PowerPoint presentation documenting this holiday storm and its impacts on our system. We are concerned that this extraordinary sequence of events could occur in another Arctic coastal community and are developing a plan to retrofit other systems to prevent recurrence of similar outages. There are many non-AVEC communities that could potentially encounter similar salt-icing events, and we hope that our experience will be educational for other utilities," Kohler wrote.

WAITING—A musk ox hunter waits for a group to spread apart north of Nome during the 2011 winter subsistence hunt.

Musk ox hunters finding success

By Tyler Rhodes

Quotas are starting to be met in the 2011 winter subsistence musk ox hunt in the game units closest to Nome.

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game announced the closure of the hunt for cow musk oxen in Unit 22D within the Kuzitrin River drainage Jan. 13 after six cows were harvested. The hunt for bull musk oxen in Unit 22C, closer to Nome, was also closed Jan. 13 after the allotted 20 bulls were taken.

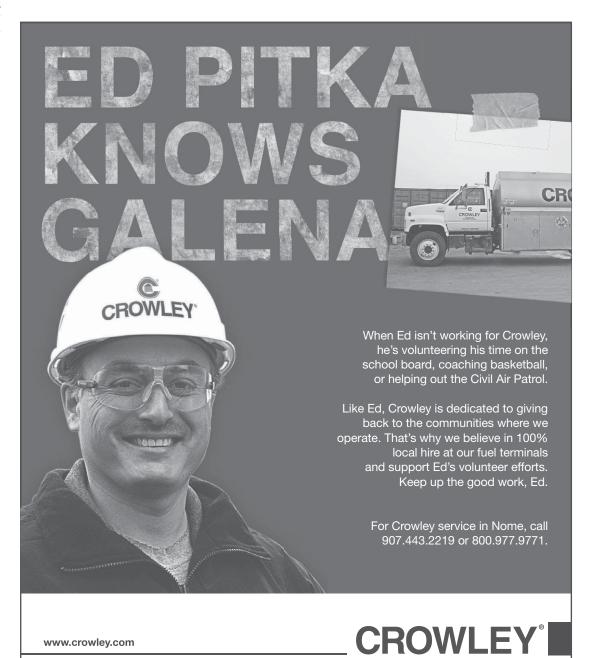

As of Jan. 18, the hunt remained open for bulls with in Unit 22D within the Kuzitrin drainage where 14 of 17 available musk oxen had been harvested. In the area described as Unit 22D Southwest, which is west of the Tisuk River, three bulls had been harvested as of Jan. 18. The quota from Unit 22D Southwest has a quota of eight musk oxen, three of which can be cows. In the rest of Unit 22D, referred to as 22D remainder and largely covering terrain west and north of Imuruk Basin, 18 out of the quota of 24 musk oxen had been harvested as of Jan. 18. Up to 11 cows can be harvested in the hunt in Unit 22D remainder.

In Unit 22B, west of the Darby Mountains, 12 of a quota of 23 bulls had been harvested as of Jan. 18. In the portion of the unit east of the Darby Mountains, two out of a quota of three bulls had been harvested.

Covering the northwestern portion of the Seward Peninsula, Unit 22E had seen nine out of a quota of 48 musk oxen harvested as of Jan. 18. Up to 44 cows can be taken in the hunt.

Unless the quotas are reached, all of the musk ox hunting in Unit 22 will come to a close March 15. Hunters with permits for musk ox in the region are advised to check with Fish and Game for up to date information on quotas and hunting opportunities. The Nome office of Fish and Game can be reached at (907) 443-2271.

Governor proposes new oil taxation, scholarship fund structure

By Diana Haecker

As the Alaska legislature went into this year's session on Tuesday, it already had 132 bills and seven Constitutional amendments to consider. In addition, Governor Sean Parnell last Friday submitted his bills for consideration.

One of Parnell's bills aims to make a large hydroelectric power project a top priority. The project is to dam the Susitna River, creating a nine-mile long water reservoir in hopes of producing about half of the railbelt's energy needs with Susitna hydropower.

Parnell said the project must go ahead to create new opportunities for economic development and jobs for Alaskans.

The proposed bill would put the Alaska Energy Authority in charge to acquire, construct, own and operate new power projects. It also proposes to end the existing Railbelt Energy Fund and to create a new Railbelt Energy Fund that would be controlled by AEA and have funds available to go forward with the Susitna project.

The governor's bill would give AEA sweeping authority to go ahead with environmental and feasibility studies and to seek preliminary approvals from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

The idea to build a large dam is not new as plans to build a three-phase dam system at the Susitna failed in the 1980's. Then as now, residents of upper Susitna valley including Talkeetna and Trapper Creek were opposed to the massive hydro project because of environmental reasons and also the fear that a dam breach could sweep away the low lying towns. The project's dam and water reservoir sits on one of the most active fault lines, rattled by frequent earthquakes.

Another bill that was presented by Governor Parnell seeks to make changes to the state's tax on oil. With the intent to create more jobs in new oil fields, Parnell said that the current ACES tax structure needs an overhaul. According to the governor, he wants to increase Alaska's competitiveness as a petroleum province.

"Given the global recession and declining job opportunities in the oil patch with declining oil production, we need to do more now than before," Parnell said. "We need to do more than just grow the state's savings accounts."

The governor's plan is similar to a tax bill introduced by Republican Anchorage legislator Mike Hawker, which would bracket oil taxation once profits hit a certain level. The governor's proposal would change the tax increase, which is triggered when a company's net profits exceed $30 a barrel. It also would cap that surcharge at 50 percent of profits when oil prices top $92.50 a barrel.

Although the state income would be reduced by the tax overhaul, Parnell said tax incentives are needed to encourage development within existing fields and in completely new parts of the state. In a letter to Senate president Gary Stevens, Parnell said, "As oil production declines and as the federal government forbids multiple development opportunities we must better incentivize development of state lands. [...] More oil means more jobs for Alaskans, more long-term revenue to the State and lower Trans-Alaska Pipeline system tariffs per barrel."

In another oil-related bill put before legislators, Parnell proposed to suspend the motor fuel tax for 24 months. "Alaskans are feeling the pinch of rising fuel costs when purchasing fuel for their vehicles, boats, snow machines and planes," Governor Parnell said. "While suspending the motor fuel tax would provide a temporary reduction in the cost of motor fuel, action is necessary for long-term solutions to high energy costs." According to the governor's office this would save the consumer a whopping $.08 per gallon of state fuel tax at the pump.

Parnell also submitted legislation to create a sustainable funding mechanism for the Alaska Performance Scholarship. This comes after the Alaska State Legislature's "Joint Higher Education Scholarship Funding Task Force" put forth recommendations. In a letter to House speaker Mike Chenault, Parnell said that the Alaska Performance Scholarship investment fund would be created consisting of appropriations from the legislature, donations and income earned on investments. Under the governor's bill, the maximum annual awards for scholarships would be $4,755 for students with a 3.5 grade average; $3.566 for students with a 3.0 grade average and $2,378 for students with a 2.5 grade point average. The graduating class of 2011 will be the first eligible for the state scholarships, if passed. Parnell's proposed FY 2012 budget contains $8.2 million for the first year of scholarships.

Bills would curb health insurance reform

By Sandra L. Medearis

Republican representatives have introduced legislation to chill federal health reform law in Alaska.

Examination of prefiled bills for the 27th Alaska Legislature reveals House Joint Resolution 5 (Wes Keller, R-Wasilla) and (House Bill 1 Carl Gatto, R-Palmer) that call for a public policy allowing a person to choose or refuse any mode of securing health services. HJR 5 goes farther, proposing an amendment to the state constitution to go before voters. The amendment would prohibit passage of laws that interfere with direct payments for health care services and the right to purchase health insurance from a privately owned company and that compel a person to participate in a health care system.

Opposition at state levels stems from two major changes becoming effective in 2014, according to AARP's analysis: Everybody must have health insurance or pay a fine — a requirement known as the "individual mandate." And state-based insurance exchanges will be set up to act as conduits for offering private coverage options for people lacking insurance from employers or government programs, with subsidies to help those with low to middle incomes.

Alaska's 27th State Legislature got underway earlier this week, on Jan. 18. The insurance bill and other proposed laws were prefiled on Jan. 7 and 14 and have not been formally debated.

Sports injuries

Switching gears to health care for youth, proposed laws in the Senate and the House relate to brain injuries in student athletes stemming from concussions, the most commonly reported traumatic brain injuries in youth who participate in sports and recreational activities. The law would require school districts to consult with the Alaska School Activities Association to develop guidelines for preventing and reporting injuries, as well as education for coaches, student athletes and parents on brain injuries and concussions. Additionally, the law would require development of standards for return to play.

Upon suspicion of injury, the law would require a student to be removed from the practice or game and not return without evaluation of a licensed health care provider quire that preventive benefits provided to would not be less health services ben active members. (R lett, R-Anchorage)

Other proposed laws on health care include:

• HB 79 on autism coverage that requires "a health insurer that offers, issues, for delivery, delivers, or renews a health care insurance plan in [Alaska] shall provide coverage for costs of the diagnosis and treatment of autism spectrum disorders." Coverage would include treatment prescribed by a licensed physician or psychologist, provided by an autism service provider following a treatment plan after a comprehensive evaluation. Treatment covered, if the law passes, would include medically necessary pharmacy care, psychiatric care, psychological care, rehabilitative care and therapeutic care. Autism spectrum disorders: a range of neurological disorders that most markedly involve some degree of difficulty with communication and interpersonal relationships, as well as obsessions and repetitive behaviors. (Rep. Scott Kawasaki, D-Fairbanks, Rep. Pete Petersen, D-Anchorage)

Health care provider's conscience would be protected by a law providing for immunity and discrimination against a health provider issuing a notice of objection to performing certain health care services (abortion?) that are against his or her conscience. The law would not excuse a provider from providing treatment in life-threatening circumstances or situations that pose a risk to a person's long-term health until a replacement arrived or a replacement provider was not avail-(Sen. John Coghill, R-Fairbanks, Sen. Fred Dyson, R-

• Retirees from certain public employment: HB 29 would prevent retirees from having health insurance benefits reduced. The law would require that preventive health services benefits provided to retired members would not be less than preventive health services benefits provided to active members. (Rep. # National oil spill commission releases safety recommendations

After the disastrous BP drill rig explosion and subsequent oil spill in the Gulf of Mexico, a National oil spill commission was tasked to look into offshore drilling practices. The commission last week issued its 398page report with recommendations. They also addressed arctic issues and caution that the Department of the Interior should ensure that the containment and response plans proposed by industry are adequate for each stage of development and that the underlying financial and technical capabilities have been satisfactorily demonstrated in the Arctic. It also mentions that the Coast Guard is required to oversee oil-spill planning and preparedness, and to supervise an oil-spill response in coastal water, and yet the Coast Guard operations base nearest to the Chukchi Sea is on Kodiak Island, approximately 1,000 miles from the leasing sites. The Coast Guard does not have sufficient ice-class vessels capable of responding to a spill under Arctic conditions: two of its three polar icebreakers have exceeded their service lives and are non-operational. The commission also recommends that exploration plans and development and production plans should be subject to NEPA review consistent with the Council on Environmental Quality's implementing regulations.

Commission co-chair William K. Reilly said that "Perhaps the only greater tragedy would be not implementing the reforms we recommended based on the disaster, and allowing another, similar disaster to occur."

School laws would add history requirement, criminal charges for "truant" parents

By Sandra L. Medearis

A proposed law going before state Legislature would require schools statewide provide education at all grade levels on the U.S. Constitution. Another bill could wipe out the high school competency exam.

The law, proposed by Rep. Wes Keller (R)-Wasilla, has a long handle: American Constitutionalism History Literacy Act. Language in the bill, if passed would deny a high school diploma to students who did not pass an exam that included reading, English, math and "history of American constitutionalism.

"An early understanding of American constitutionalism empowers students to make rational, evidence-based decisions regarding their civic judgments, rights and duties;" Keller's bill states.
History of American Constitutionalism?

Yikes! What could be on the test? The school curriculum, if the bill passes, would aim to ensure the student's understanding of the "history of American constitutionalism as portrayed in the Declaration of Independence, the first states constitutions, the Articles of Confederation, the Constitution of the United States, the Federalist Papers, the Bill of Rights, and other historical documents produced in the founding of our constitutional republic form of government."

If passed, the act directs state Dept. of Education and Early Development to begin to plan implementation immediately to get the required studies in gear by July 2012.

The proposed law, House Bill 5, showed up on a list of prefiled bills released Jan. 7 for lawmakers' consideration in the 27th Legislature that started Jan. 18.

SB 9 on the Senate's pre-filed list could, if passed, puts parents and others at risk for charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor if they know of a person under age of 18 using or being in the presence of use or manufacture of controlled substances or be a runaway if they do not report such. Under the law, a parent could face the same charges for allowing a school-age child to be habitually absent from school. The law would apply to children between age six and up to age 18. The law would change the upper limit from 16 years old to 18. It would not apply to underage kids who have had minority status removed by emancipation, marriage, etc. The law's language exempts students who are in home school, private school, and on pre-approved absences for supervised educational programs that meet public school standards.

Other proposed laws affecting school programs and students include:

 School lunches: Under Senate Bill 3, schools taking part in the federal Free Lunch Program would also receive a much-needed state match for those funds. This will encourage more schools to provide nutritious meals for children in need. Currently, Alaska is one of the only states in the nation that neglects to supplement the program, according to sponsor Sen. Bill Wielechowski (D)-Anchorage. The match would add 15 cents for breakfast and 35 cents for lunch.

• SB 6 adds a pre-kindergarten program to public schools beginning with school year 2013-2014, intended to jump-start students ages 4 and 5. Sen. Hollis French (D) Anchorage and Sen. Bettye J. Davis (A)-Anchorage are the sponsors.

• SB 10, sponsored by Davis, calls for an end to the high school competency exam, effective July 2011. The law would require the schools to give the community a comprehensive annual report on student scores and academic progress. SB 1, sponsored by Davis, would require the state Board of Education and Early Development to give an annual report to the Legislature covering the board's efforts to develop and improve a quality comprehensive education system.

Ask a docotor: more questions from second graders

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Here is another collection of answers to medical questions posed in letters written to the doctor by Mr. Slingsby's second grade class. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here with permission from the students' parents. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

I hate needles and shots! Is there any way to get the medicine without shots? Kenosha Kiyuklook

I'm with you, Kenosha. Needles and shots take all the fun out of a doctor visit, even for the doctor. I am glad there are many medicines that come in a pill or liquid form, but some medicines only work if given by injection (with a needle). When I head. I don't think you will get a doctor's note to skip math class, so here are some things that may help keep you from having headaches:

First, sit up straight. Many headaches occur because of poor posture, especially when doing detail work like math problems. If you sit up straight, the muscles in your neck and scalp can relax.

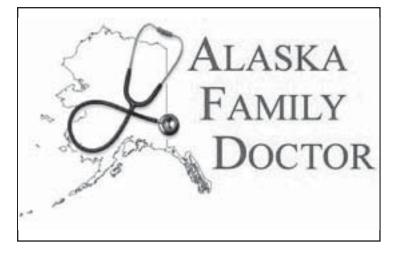

Next, make sure you have plenty of light to do your work. Your eyes do not have to work as hard in a bright room.

Working in a darkened room can strain the eyes and cause a headache.

Also, tell your parents or teacher if words or objects look blurry to you. Sometimes headaches are an early sign of eyestrain that may require a visit to the eye doctor.

Make sure you are drinking plenty of water. Headaches are one of the earliest signs of dehydration. In the same way, eat healthy snacks like fruits and fresh vegetables. Too much sugar, soda (pop), or sports drinks can cause headaches.

Many doctors recommend keeping a headache diary. In your diary, write down some details about each headache including the time it occurs, what you were doing, and what you ate that day. Many times this helps identify the real cause. It is a good idea to see your doctor if you have headaches more than once a week or if your head hurts for over an hour, especially after you finish your schoolwork.

Dear Dr. Bob,

What should I do if I get frostbite on my cheek? Thanks, Stephanie West

Thank you for your letter and excellent question. Many people get frostbite this time of year when the air is cold and the wind is blowing. It is important to know how to prevent frostbite and if it occurs, how to Frostbite means "frozen skin." When exposed to cold air, skin may begin to freeze. Usually this takes several minutes, but when it is very cold the skin can freeze quickly, sometimes in a matter of seconds. At first the skin only freezes on the surface. If allowed to continue, the cold air can freeze very deep and cause permanent damage to the skin or other tissues.

To prevent frostbite, keep all skin covered when you are outdoors during winter. If you are playing, skiing, or snowmachining and feel any areas of cold skin, stop immediately and have someone help you cover the cold or exposed skin.

If you get an area of frostbite, you should cover the affected area to prevent further freezing. When safely in a warm area the skin may be thawed with warm, not hot, water or warm compresses. Never rub frozen skin. It is fragile and will break easily. Do not break open any blisters that form. Once warmed the area of frostbite can be washed with soap and covered with a sterile bandage. The area should be cleaned every day watching for signs of skin infection. Ibuprofen (Motrin) or acetaminophen (Tylenol) may be used for pain that develops when the skin is warm again.

learned why we need to have shots, it made getting shots a lot easier for me.

There are two main reasons for getting a shot. The first is to receive medicine quickly. When you swallow a medicine, it takes a long time for the medication to get where it needs to be. It has to pass through the stomach and the intestines. Then it is taken through the liver. Only then does it make its way to the rest of the body. This can take a long time. In some cases, the medicine never makes it past the stomach. So shots are a way the doctor can give medicine quickly. Some people must take shots every day. They are very brave and often give themselves the injection.

The second reason we get shots is to protect us from a serious disease. When a person gets a vaccine shot, like the measles vaccine, they are protected against the real disease. Before we had vaccines, many children died of diseases that now are very rare. So when you get a shot, it may hurt just a little, but you are preventing an illness that would hurt you a lot.

By the way, here is a little trick to keep shots from hurting. Ask if you can put a cold pack (like snow in a plastic bag) over the injection site for a few minutes before the shot is given. Many times it puts the skin nerves to sleep and makes the injection less painful.

Dear Dr. Bob.

How do you get a headache when you are just doing your math and it's quiet? Thank you. Reese Bahnke.

Thanks for your question, Reese. Headaches have many causes. Sometimes just using your brain extra hard can cause pain in your Get the news each week

Lady Nanooks sweep Valdez

The Nome Lady Nanooks brought their season up to an even record of 5-5 after notching two victories at home this weekend against the visiting Valdez Buccaneers.

Nome dodged a late-game comeback attempt from Valdez on Friday night to hold on to its lead and come away with the 41-36 win. Dylan Johnson had the hot hand for Nome, putting up 19 points for the Lady Nanooks. Valdez was led by Caitlyn Auble who also scored 19 points.

Nome came back ready for more on Saturday night, jumping out of the gate in the first quarter with a 19-9 run. Freshman Shayla Johnson was on fire in the first half, putting up all of her 16 points before half time. Shayla Johnson led all Nome scorers.

The Buccaneers made a run of their own in the second quarter, cutting Nome's lead to five. The Nanooks' defensive play after halftime, however, put the game out of reach for Valdez. Nome kept the Buccaneers scoreless in the third quarter, mitigating Valdez's 16-9 advantage in the fourth quarter. Nome won the match 49-42.

Following Shayla Johnson in scoring for Nome was Devynn Johnson, who added a dozen points to the effort. Dylan Johnson scored eight and Chloe Mattheis added six. Renee Lammer and Liz Luce each scored two points for Nome.

Fans will again be able to watch the Lady Nanooks play this weekend when Hooper Bay and Chevak come to town. The Nome varsity team will play Hooper Bay at 7 p.m. both Friday and Saturday nights. The junior varsity squads from both Nome and Chevak will face off at 5:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday.

Eyes focused on a sealskin ball suspended in mid air just out of reach, Josh Bourdon, a sixth grader at Nome Elementary stated, "It's a lot harder when it's over my head!"

Bourdon was one of the final three boys left in the One-foot High Kick during Saturday's Junior Native Olympics competition. Nome's Wolverines were competing in a head-to-head battle between classmates and relatives. Athletics is generally comprised of competition against rivals rivaling teams vying for the top spot. Edging one another out and going the distance with skill and camaraderie takes style. Nome Elementary students demonstrated just that—composure under pressure while helping their teammates.

The morning's competition had a good turnout with 16 students from seven different grade levels. The students were representing a whopping 66 elementary students who turned up for at least one practice during the JNYO season that started the beginning of November. Many students expressed an interest in the games, and practiced them during the school day. Coach Earp encourages students to get involved with the sport in efforts to support the Native community.

A highlight of the competition was an all-out battle for first in the girls' Alaskan High Kick. Ivory Okleasik and Taeler Brunette went 11 rounds to challenge one another up to the height of 54 inches. The girls were focused on the task at hand and kicked to the best of their ability. Coaches, teammates and family members had their eyes on the gals as the stakes increased. The event ended in Okleasik reaching for her personal best in the event, bettering her kick by more than 10 inches.

Nome's Junior Native Youth team has submitted their results to Cook Inlet Tribal Council to be used as the team's results for the state competition that will be held this weekend in Anchorage, January 20-23. Several sixth graders of the Nome JNYO team members will travel down to the competition held at Begich Middle School.

Keep an eye out for results as the team competes against the best in the sport.

Boys nab fourth at Alaska Airlines Winter Classic tourney

It took a team from Maryland boasting one of the top ranked players in the nation to hand the Nanook boys basketball team its first loss of the season. Nome faced Princeton Day Academy from Baltimore in the first round of the Alaska Airlines Winter Classic tournament hosted by Anchorage's West High School. Led by Chris Thomas, ranked by ESPN as the fourth best sophomore guard in the nation, Princeton Day put on an 89point show against Nome who struggled down the stretch in the Jan. 13 game. Led by Christian Leckband's 26 points, the Nanooks scored 58 points in the defeat. Tim Sullivan added 12 points for Nome. The Nanooks trailed by 13 at the half before the Storm went on a 49-31 run in the second half. The loss was Nome's first of the season, coming in its 10th game.

The Nanooks rebounded nicely after the initial eye-opener in the tournament, taking its next two games and placing fourth overall. In their Friday effort against Ketchikan, the Nanooks blasted out of the gate with a 23-11 first quarter in a seesaw game. Ketchikan answered back with a 17-10 second quarter. Nome, however, was able to keep out ahead in the match-up, taking the win 69-60. Leckband again led the way for Nome with 34 points, followed by Nathan Blandford who put up 16 points.

It was Anchorage's class 4A East High who got the jump-start in Saturday's game against Nome in the tourney. The Nanooks battled back from a 16-4 initial deficit to trail by only a basket at halftime. Nome took the reins in the second half, outscoring East by nine in the third quarter and by four in the fourth. Nome's 73-61 win was fueled by 22 points from Sullivan who connected on three three-pointers in the third. Sullivan hit a total of five threepointers in the game. Leckband, who was named to the all-tournament team, notched 21 points in the game. David Stickel also put in a double-digit effort by scoring a dozen points.

Nome was the second-highest placing team from Alaska participating in the tournament. Host West High nabbed the top honors for an Alaska team, taking second place after losing the championship round to Christian Life High School from Humble, Texas. Columbia, Ga., took the third-place honors after defeating Princeton Day in the final day of action. The Nanooks must feel like they are part-time residents of Anchorage as they head back this week for their third tournament in the big city this month. Nome will participate in the Alaska Prep Shootout, hosted by Dimond High School. The Nanooks will start the tourney Jan. 20 facing the No. 2 ranked player among Alaska's biggest schools, Anchorage's Bartlett High School. Other teams at the tournament include class 3A favorite Cordova, and 4A schools Dimond, North Pole. Ketchikan, Juneau and Palmer.

On August 8, 2005, the world learned of the dramatic rescue of seven Russian sailors trapped in a small submarine entangled in a fishing net. The men had survived three cold, dark days at the bottom of the ocean, and had less than six hours of oxygen left. Meanwhile, up above, a frantic, unified rescue effort by Russian, American, British and Japanese personnel was underway. Finally, the submarine was freed. This team saw through deeds what the brotherhood of the sea really means.

Chapter 2 of the book of Ephesians talks about unity. Once we were Gentiles who were aliens and strangers, but citizens together with God's people and members of God's family (v.19). Nome has a population of about 3,000. Among us there are ten church denominations and three radio stations that air 24 hours a day. Many missionaries have come to Nome to further the kingdom of God.

I have seen much happening in Nome for the past 12 years I have lived here. Young people attempt suicide amidst hopelessness, others have problems with alcohol and drugs, people go missing and have yet to be found, and many families are broken.

Believers in Jesus are commissioned to undertake the most important rescue effort. I am certain that the united mission's efforts are bringing hope, salvation, education and relief to desperate people around Aywaan.

This is what the household of God is all about.

Congressman Howard Pollock dies in California

Governor Sean Parnell ordered state flags to be lowered to half-staff at sunrise Tuesday in honor and memory of former Alaska Congressman Howard Pollock. Pollock died Sunday at 90 in Coronado, California. Pollock served as Alaska's second congressional representative from 1966 through 1970 and as a territorial legislator in 1952. During World War II, Pollock lost his arm to a grenade. Practicing law in Anchorage, Pollock went on to the state Senate in 1960 and 1964. Following his time in Congress, Pollock joined the Nixon administration as deputy director of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. In more recent years, he served as president of the National Rifle Association as well as international director of the Safari Club International.

Superintendent

11 board meeting at approximately 10:30 p.m. The superintendent broke the news after a nearly four hour closed-door session in which the board evaluated Wehde's job performance and debated his contract offer.

The board's offering of a one-year contract has come across as a vote of reduced confidence in Wehde's leadership.

For the past dozen years, Nome Public Schools has offered its superintendents either three- or two-year contracts. State statute sets a maximum of three consecutive years for superintendents' contracts. Wehde said Alaska districts have generally been split more or less evenly between offering three-year and two-year contracts with a recent trend toward the two-year offerings. He said a few districts, such as the Iditarod School District, offer superintendent contracts on a yearly basis.

In an interview Jan. 13, Wehde said being given only a single year with job certainty would not fit with his leadership style. "I was trained at [the University of Alaska Anchorage] to consider a principle with accepting a one-year contract, that it galvanizes your leadership into a one-year burst," he said. "A superintendent is well served when they can cross two cycles of hiring and two budget lines."

Wehde also said a longer contract would allow a greater ability to achieve the board's goals. "Without the latitude of a two-year period, I would not have the ability to turn up back burners to full boil," he said.

In addition to his feelings over the limitations of a one-year contract, Wehde said his decision to decline the offer will allow him to move his career in a different direction. "I want to see what's over the next hill," he said. Wehde repeatedly noted that his decline of the offer was done with respect to the board. "The school board did offer me an opportunity to work for them, it wasn't a card game," he said. "I'm acting on my own internal controls and on what I believe will really serve the district."

Other than being for a single year instead of two, Wehde said he was offered essentially the same contract for an annual salary of $95,000 and housing.

Board was not united in offer

Judging by the duration of the closed-door executive session called to evaluate Wehde and discuss his contract, the five members of the board of education were at odds over the issue. The board moved from the elementary school library to an administrative conference room around 6:45 p.m. They did not call Wehde into the room until nearly three hours later.

Signs that the meeting was perhaps tense came before Wehde was invited to join the board. Board President Gloria Karmun reappeared in the library after an hour to ask for a copy of the board's policy on superintendent evaluations. At the two-hour mark, board member Nickels emerged for a smoke break. A half hour later she breezed through the library on the way for another cigarette, looking agitated.

An hour later—which was about an hour after Wehde had joined the board in the private session—Nickels emerged once more, clearly angry and flustered. "Never in my life," she repeated. Wehde entered the library shortly after Nickels and relayed the message that the rest of the board wanted her to rejoin them. Reluctantly Nickels exited the library and Wehde announced that he had declined the one-year offer.

Nickels soon reappeared. "It's not a good thing for me to be back in there," she said. "You don't take a two-year contract and offer one. It's total disrespect."

The rest of the board members, upon their return to the library, were less transparent in their feelings over the one-year offer and Wehde's subsequent refusal. Characteristically stoic, Karmun succinctly announced the result of the contract discussion and continued with the final items of business for the meeting.

That final agenda item was the standard board member comment period. Board member Betsy Brennan used a portion of her comment time to thank Wehde for his service over the past year and a half. "I do wish you were continuing to lead Nome Public Schools," she said.

Nickels used her comment time to lambast the one-year offer. "Once again in January, the school board has managed to let down all the children in Nome, and I would like to thank all those responsible," she said. Nickels' comment referenced the split decision by the board almost exactly one year prior to the Jan. 11 meeting to not renew contracts for former Nome-Beltz principal Janeen Sullivan and vice principal Doug Boyer. That move resulted in tumultuous series of events that ultimately led to the ouster of two board members through a recall vote and spurred divisions within the community of Nome that still linger today. Nickels had strongly advocated for retaining the two administrators.

Nickels has been no less vocal over the board's offering of a one-year deal to Wehde. In another e-mail sent to news outlets, Nickels expressed her frustration. "I am saddened to be connected to a School Board that continues to successfully inflict personal vendetta's [sic] on our School District that threatens the success of our schools and kids! Even as a member of the 'majority' wishing to renew Jon's contract, the minority prevailed through the offering of only a one year contract extension," she wrote. "This is less than his initial two year contract and certainly would adversely hamper his leadership for successful implementation of our recently developed FIVE YEAR Strategic Plan that has been embraced by our whole community as well as much needed administrative consistency. The offer spoke volumes and Jon heard it loud and clear."

In a later interview, Karmun declined to give specifics over the board's decision to offer a single-year contract instead of a two-year deal. "The full board decided by consensus to offer a one-year contract, and Jon declined," she said. "The Nome Board of Education did a fair and just process, and it's unfortunate that Jon Wehde was not willing to accept the terms."

Karmun said she had no critique or criticism to level over the district's administration during Wehde's tenure. "There's a great [administrative] team in place. With Jon's leadership we're fortunate to have the team we do," she said.

Speaking a couple of days after the board meeting, Wehde was hesitant to use the term "surprised" over the board's offer, but he also said he had not received any sense that the board was displeased with his service. "We have a very conservative board in regard to back-and-forth communication. It's adequate, it's acceptable," he said. "I haven't gotten any issue back to me whatsoever that I stood to be non-renewed. The terms of the contract are closely guarded topics that the chair doesn't lay on the table."

Wehde has worked for the district for eight years, serving as principal of Nome-Beltz, a director of federal programs and Native education, assistant superintendent and superintendent.

What now?

After announcing the already-known result of the evaluation and contract discussion Jan. 11, Karmun recommended the board contact the Alaska Association of School Boards to inform them of the coming vacancy and to solicit help in the search for a new superintendent. The board members were to meet Jan. 18 to plot a course for finding a new superintendent. Results of the meeting were not available as of press time.

Karmun said Jan. 14 that the board would decide at the Jan. 18 special meeting whether to adopt a proposal from the AASB on pursuing a new superintendent. Karmun said she personally would want a new superintendent to carry out the district's adopted strategic plan to have a heavy background in administration and education. "That's just my perspective," she said.

Wehde was brought on as superintendent after already working within the district. He said the only other current district employee properly credentialed to serve as a superintendent is Nome Elementary School Principal and Special Education Director David Keller. Asked if he would consider himself a candidate for the position, Keller would only say that he emphatically supports keeping Wehde in the job. "I am still hoping that reason will somehow win out, and somehow this district will enjoy the highly competent and caring leadership of Mr. Wehde for many years to come," he wrote in an e-mail.

Keller cited Wehde's work in initiating the district's strategic plan and establishment of a relationship with the Kennewick School District in Washington state in an effort to learn from its successes. Keller both praised Wehde's efforts to move those efforts forward and advocated keeping him in his role to see them through. "Abraham Lincoln once remarked that it was best not to swap horses when crossing streams. I believe we are in the midst of a powerful stream. It is my opinion that, without the steady, knowledgeable and caring leadership of Jon Wehde, we are apt to be swept downstream," he wrote.

fice employees and the eight members of the district's administrative leadership team. Contracts were approved for business manager Cathi Wojtanek, human resources coordinator Bill Gartung and operations foreman Larry Thomas.

The board withheld discussing the administrative pay schedule, reserving the topic for a future board meeting when the discussion would also cover other areas of the district's budget. Board President Gloria Karmun said delaying the topic would give the public more opportunity to discuss budget items. "We want to afford them this opportunity, not only for this item but for other line items as well." Karmun said.

Board looks for direction for elementary reading initiative

Wanting to keep momentum behind a proposed reading initiative for Nome's elementary students, board members questioned what needed to happen to bring the effort to fruition.

The push to implement a program comes after a delegation of elementary teachers and administrators traveled to Kennewick, Wash., in the fall to observe the district, which has been hailed as a national success story in turning reading scores around. The group gave a detailed report to the board on what they observed on their trip and expressed a desire to implement some of the same strategies in Nome. Just what form a reading initiative would take and how it would be implemented have never been formalized.

Board members have repeatedly asked for updates from the teachers who made the trip on their progress in putting ideas into practice. The teachers have noted their willingness to move forward with an intensive reading program, but have also said they alone should not be held responsible for formulating just how that program will be developed and implemented.

At the Jan. 11 meeting, board member Betsy Brennan brought up the need to formulate a more specific plan if the reading initiative is to turn from idea into action. "At our board retreat, one of my questions was, OK we see this, all the board members are excited about this reading initiative; how do we go about steering our district in this direction?" Brennan asked. "What do we do? Is there a plan?"

Board member Marie Tozier said she believed the ball was in the board's court to put a plan into action. "I think the discussion we had with the team is we need to take the first step," she said. "I think it's going to come back to Jon [Wehde] with how do we start."

Board member Barb Amarok asked Wehde if the elementary school principal and the coordinator for curriculum would be the appropriate staff to be tasked with formulating the program. Wehde said the two positions work among a broader framework of people the superintendent calls his leadership team, suggesting any such plan would not fall solely on their shoulders. "It's a way of saying yes, but we're more refined at it," Wehde said in response to Amarok's question.

Additionally, Tozier asked if copies of the book "Annual Growth, Catch-Up Growth" could be available for the public to read. The book by Nancy Kerr, Paul Rosier and Lynn Fielding provides the framework from which the Kennewick district addressed the goal of having 90 percent of its third graders reading at a proficient level. Tozier said the book could help the public gain an understanding of what is envisioned for the elementary. "We keep on talking about this plan and people wonder what you are talking about," Brennan said.

Karmun suggested holding a public information session on the book and the idea of bolstering elementary reading proficiency at the board's next work session. "I think we need to make a public awareness meeting at our next work session, have a session on the green book for the public's benefit," Karmun said.

Brennan also suggested finding a name for the initiative, noting that the earlier labeling of the team and effort with the moniker "Kennewick" took away from the Nome district owning its own plan to improve reading. "We keep on talking about the Kennewick team and the Kennewick program," she said. "We talked about stopping calling it the Kennewick program and taking ownership of it, so people are associating it with something we as a district want to implement and put our own spin on it."

Activity bus to run daily

Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast announced during his report that a daily bus will run from the high school campus back to Nome each day of the school week at 5:10 p.m. The bus, made possible by support from Nome Eskimo Community, will allow students who do not have their own transportation to take part in after-school activities, such as tutoring, receiving extra help from teachers and extracurricular activities occurring at the campus. The high school/junior high complex is located approximately four miles out of central Nome.

Nome Eskimo Community has been offering tutoring at the school three afternoons a week and has provided transportation for the service. Gast said the tribal group will provide half the funding for the daily bus service.

The bussing will also aid in Gast's plan to offer a credit recovery program for students who have fallen off pace to graduate with their class. Using a web-based program, Gast said time slots can be set up in the afternoon for students to catch up.

Students of the month

Nome-Beltz Assistant Principal Carmen Russo announced the students of the month for December, presenting seventh grader Tonia Osborne for the junior high. Osborne's parents, Wilma and Eric Osborne attended the meeting to see Tonia receive the award. Russo also named high school student of the month Kyle Griemsmann, who was not present to receive his certificate.

2011-2012 school calendar approved

Board members gave quick approval to the school calendar for the next school year. School will start for students Aug. 22, 2011 and end May 23, 2012. Teachers will first report to work on Aug. 17, 2011.

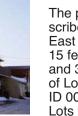

A calendar adjustment was also approved for the current school year to make up for Dec. 3 when school was closed for weather. Students will now have class on March 24 which would have been a day slated for parent-teacher conferences. The conferences have been moved forward by a day and will occur on a Friday and Saturday, March 25 and March 26, allowing teachers to make up the missed workday on a Saturday.

Auction of properties forestalled

By Tyler Rhodes

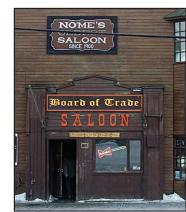

The handful of Nomeites hanging out in the foyer of the federal building in Nome Tuesday morning expecting a show saw nothing more than a trickle of postal customers coming and going

The 10 a.m. auction scheduled for the building that houses Nome's famous Board of Trade Saloon never materialized. "The stage at the BOT is still rocking," said Jim West, Jr. at 10:30 a.m. that morning. West is the son of the late Jim West who owned and operated the Front Street bar for years.

Wells Fargo was set to auction the iconic building on Front Street's south side as well as residential properties on Lomen Avenue as part of foreclosure proceedings. According to legal notices printed in The Nome Nugget, nearly $278,000 was owed on a $690,000 loan. Wells Fargo spokesman David Kennedy was able to confirm the cancellation of the foreclosure auction, noting that he was unable to say more due to customer confidentiality.

Other than saying he was able to prevail in this round of difficulties with the bank, Jim West, Jr. also preferred not to comment on the matter.

While it was the building and not the BOT name or liquor license that current location.

was threatened by the foreclosure, the bar still had an "End of an Era Party?" Saturday night just in case. Advertised as a chance to "rock the stagecoach off its wheels and ship/send the pony home," the party definitely struck a defiant tone against the bank whose logo just happens to be a stagecoach. Whether the party attracted a deep-pocketed benefactor, or just raised the level of karma in the BOT's favor, the "Headquarters for the Sin City of Nome" will remain open in its

Board sets parameters for superintendent search

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Board of Education cleared the way for the Alaska Association of School Boards to start searching for Nome's new superintendent at a special meeting Jan. 18.

The move comes following Superintendent Jon Wehde's refusal to accept a one-year extension of his current contract as opposed to a new two-year deal at the Jan. 11 board meeting.

For a fee of $7,000 the AASB will facilitate the process of advertising the job opening and act as the point of contact for interested applicants. The organization will also collect resumes and applications, and perform credential and background checks on job candidates. While AASB conducts much of the legwork in the search, the five members of the board of education will be the ones vetting and selecting the finalists and new superintendent. Nome's school board has used AASB for previous superintendent searches.

Following the unanimous approval by the board to utilize AASB's services, the board members and AASB representatives wasted no time in outlining a plan for the search. Heeding the suggestions of Joseph Reeves, associate executive director of the AASB, the board set March 7 as the cut-off date for applications and March 23-24 as the dates for interviewing finalists for the job. The board plans to have a

City council to discuss concerns with school board

During a meeting of the Nome Common Council Monday, Councilwoman Josie Stiles expressed concern about Nome Public Schools, noting that NPS Superintendent Jon Wehde has decided to vacate his position in June. She suggested that the council facilitate a meeting with the Nome Board of Education to determine whether the board needs help or direction from the council.

Councilman Stan Andersen asked Stiles whether she wants the council to hold a special meeting or a work session. Stiles said a work session or any other appropriate meeting would do, so Andersen suggested that City Manager Josie Bahnke schedule a work session with the school board on Feb. 14 at 6 p.m., just prior to the next regular council meeting at 7:30 p.m.

Nome's new police officer, Andrew W. Schwartz took the oath of office at the meeting.

Funding issues

Andersen, who chaired the meeting in the absence of Mayor Denise Michels, asked for comments from council members on correspondence recently received by the city. Councilman Jim West Jr. cited a letter dated

Jan. 20 from Kevin Kastner, executive director of Iron Dog Inc. asking the city to offer a $5,000 contingency prize for this year's Iron Dog snowmobile race, as it did for the 2010 race. The Iron Dog trail class participants will leave Big Lake Feb. 18 for their trip to Nome. The pro class race is scheduled Feb. 20-26 from Big

Editorial

Revitalize

Nome's Front Street needs a boost. We have too many empty lots and blank faces. The most egregious example of benign neglect is the old Wein Building that sits across the street from City Hall and has been vacant since the 1980s.

Nome needs to get a real plan into effect to bring life back into Front Street. We have big enough lots for the proposed new state office building and a new museum. There are many potential sites for new construction but we have to do a lot of housecleaning. Our public face is a sad, old, empty, gray, dilapidated, flap-shingled, broken windowed hulk. It's an incredible shame that it has been allowed to sit right smack dab under the noses of our city fathers who turn a blind eye on its unsightlyness.

If the Wein Building is such a sacred cow, would someone please put it out to pasture or slap a few coats of paint on it? The owner of the Wein Building should be ashamed of the black eye it gives our community. But, it's hard to shame a person who no longer lives in town.

Letters-

Dear Editor:

Thank you for publishing the letter from Edward Tocktoo on January 13, 2011. There have been many insinuations locally, that while I was the mayor (2007-2010) I was "stealing" money from the City of Brevig Mission. The local leaders from the City, Tribal Government, Elders Committee and even the local Native Corporation board all thought so, because no one defended me at the time.

As I told the local leaders at a "Joint Council" meeting, "Go to the City office and look through all the bank statements. Banks can't lie!" Not one of them went to the City offices to see if their insinuations were true. Real leaders get the facts first before making decisions. I did not get one apology from any of them, for making false statements about me publicly. I did get an apology, however, from a young person not involved in local politics. The apology was unrelated to the insinuations, but still an apology.

Money had always been missing. There are now security cameras installed where there were always issues of missing money. The City had been operating for a few years prior to my leadership, in the "red" so to speak. It had been using funds from the Water & Sewer account. Those funds were to be put into an R&R account which was never set up by the past administration. Now the City's water plant is starting to show wear and tear, with no funds for major repairs. The last City Council had no concerns of it or none was shown. A lot of concern was put on public opinion. What will the people think, do?

The recent firing of an employee was because that employee had not followed City Ordinances and more severely State Gaming Regulations. (The City's Ordinances state that the mayor does hiring and firing with Council approval.) Should what was done, gone through and with the entire City Council being involved, (I wasn't), they would have to be recalled. Where would that leave the City organization? Probably in better shape to operate normally.

No one, at least here in Brevig Mission, pays for services like street cleaning. The City's residential rental rates are not high enough to cover up-keep of the buildings and insurance costs. These are just two issues on the surface. I was so surprised, more shocked, when I first became the Mayor to learn that most of the people thought that government is supposed to take care of you, especially when I heard it from an elder.

Spreading misleading information about someone just so he/she won't get re-elected or hired is old. "Depending on the past, especially past certainties, things that work for you in the past, means not progressing beyond the past." — Mark Hamilton Founder of the Neothink® Society. Money is not the issue, it never was for me; they say it has no home so it must not be a real value. Real values have homes, so they are values! That is where my honesty and love for my community is!

Federal subsistence board changes fisheries regs

The Federal Subsistence Board met on January 18 through 20 in Anchorage and ended up tabling most of the proposed changes to subsistence fishing in different areas in the state. One proposal of concern was by the Southeast regional advisory council to permanently close the Eulachon or Hooligan fishery on the Unuk River. The proposal was tabled as participants felt that the Metlakatla people haven't enough notice and consultation about the permanent closure recommendation. Also on the table were three proposals to restrict or prohibit customary trade in the Yukon. The Board deferred action on two of these proposals and requested that the Western Interior, Eastern Interior and Yukon-Kuskokwim Delta Regional advisory councils form a subcommittee to work on a definition of what constitutes "significant commercial enterprise."

Other proposals that would have affected the Yukon River management area were rejected or withdrawn at the request of the proponent. For the Kodiak management area, the board adopted a proposal to reduce the harvest limit of king crab from six to three per household. The board, chaired by Unalakleet's Tim Towarak, also met with tribal leaders to start the tribal consultation process that was promised when the Department of Interior announced sweeping subsistence reforms.

Legislature starts its first week in session

The first week of the Alaska legislature has already been a tumultuous one with Ketchikan lawmaker Kyle Johansen fighting a district one GOP recall. After his re-election. Johansen had a falling out with the House GOP caucus and lost his position as the majority leader after he and Anchorage Rep. Charisse Millett walked out over an organizational dispute, according to AP. On the constructive side, the House passed bills to create special house committees for economic development, trade and tourism, a special committee on energy, on fisheries and on military and veterans affairs.

Rep. Young votes to repeal health care law

Last week, the U.S. House passed a bill repealing the 2010 Health care law. The vote largely broke down along party lines, 245 to 189. The push to repeal the sweeping health care reform is not expected to survive the Senate, which is still controlled by Democrats. Calling it a job-killer, Congressman Don Young voted in favor of repealing the law. Young called the law "the single worst piece of legislation" he has seen in four decades in Congress and said it's a huge step towards "socialization of our society." Alaska House judiciary committee chairman Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, has introduced legislation at the state level to block the law's requirement to purchase health insurance. Gatto claims that massive government subsidies would be needed to purchase the required health insurance, which would raise health insurance premiums and push more Americans onto government healthcare programs funded by the

Trapper Creek man kills husband, wounds wife

A Trapper Creek man was killed and his wife wounded when a gunman opened fire on the elderly couple on Saturday night outside their residence in Trapper Creek.

While circumstances are still under investigation, troopers said that Trapper Creek resident Jeremy Nelson shot and killed sixty-six year old Robert Carey in front of his house. Nelson also shot at Carey's wife Verna, 58, and wounded her.

Verna Carey managed to call the troopers. They found Robert Carey dead in his driveway in front of his house and took his injured wife from the residence to an ambulance. Troopers responded with a Special Emergency Reaction Team and Helo One. After more than six hours they managed to arrest the suspect not far from the shooting scene. At 4:50 a.m. Nelson was taken into custody. He was charged with first-degree murder, attempted murder and first-degree assault. He was taken to the Mat-Su Pretrial Facility and is held without bail.

Alaska's export shows 30 percent increase

The value of Alaska exports from January through October 2010 has increased by 30.4 percent to more than $3.8 billion compared to the same period in 2009, according to data from the U.S. Census Bureau. Exports of seafood, minerals, energy, precious metals and forest products saw double-digit increases. The seafood export value alone was up 12 percent, to $1.7 billion, after a banner catch year in the state, especially the salmon industry which had its best season in 18 years. Forest products exports grew in value by 38.4 percent, to $86.4 million.

Alaska's mineral export value for those 10 months was up 63.6 percent, to $1.3 billion, primarily due to much higher world prices for zinc. The world's largest zinc mine, the Red Dog mine, is located north of Kotzebue. The value of Alaska's precious metals exports, primarily gold, increased 59.9 percent to $177.5 million. The rise in mineral export value also includes $39.2 million for Canadian copper passing through the Skagway Ore Terminal.

Council to revise ordinance for taxis, buses, vehicles for hire

By Laurie McNicholas

Nome Police Chief John Papasodora submitted proposed revisions to Chapter 3.10 of the Nome Code of Ordinances titled, "Taxicabs, Buses and Vehicles for Hire" to the Nome Common Council at a work session on Jan. 19. His revisions focus on sections of the ordinance that apply to a chauffeur's license.

Papasodora told the council he drafted the revisions after learning from Acting City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck that the council planned to review Chapter 3.10. "The ones who need to understand it are potential taxi drivers," he said.

Noting that sections of the current ordinance are confusing, Papasodora said he reorganized them to guide the license applicant through the process and to clearly define the action the city may or will take on an application.

The following statements in Papasodora's memo of Jan. 17 to City Manager Josie Bahnke summarize his revisions and his reasons for proposing them. In the memo he refers to Alaska Statutes Title 11, "Criminal Law;" Title 12, "Code of Criminal Procedure;" and Title 28, "Motor Vehicles." Papasodora wrote:

"I have removed most of the language that assigns this process to the police department and to the police chief. Though I am unclear as to the origin of the language, it did propose an adversarial relationship between the business community and the chief's office. As action taken is at the behest of the City, it would seem reasonable to use this constructive context, however with the full understanding that the police will complete and coordinate the investigatory aspects of the licensing process.

"I have also retracted the listing of criminal offenses under Title 11 as it was confusing and inaccurate. Rather than listing by offense title, it is listed by heading. Since I (or some police agent) will be reviewing these anyway, then it should be fairly straightforward. I have also added language to consider Title 28 violations, as these are the main traffic/vehicle related statutes that may apply to this field.

"I have included filing a release form so we can actually do background work without assuming liability. A copy [is] attached. This will also help with actually processing fingerprint cards, though I'm communicating with [the Department of Public Safety] on how to use this information to the best purpose.

"I am also proposing a NON REFUNDABLE processing/licensing fee of $50. The personnel costs we are investing in this process far exceed any revenue the City is realizing. It is NON REFUND-ABLE as we have to go through all of the review process regardless of how the application turns out.

"I also streamlined the appeal process to go by written notice to the council for consideration. This is just a suggestion.

"The renewal section has also been revised to eliminate the redundancy. The fee has been set as the same for acquiring a license as we still go through all the same administrative steps.

"Finally, I didn't see the penalty provision under the code I pulled off the web. It is at the end of the section."

Ten Eyck told the council she will send the text of Papasodora's proposed changes in Chapter 3.10 of the Nome Code of Ordinances to the city's attorney for review.

Lake to Fairbanks via Nome.

West made a motion seconded by Councilwoman Mary Knodel for the city to offer a $5,000 prize to split between the second and third place finishers into Nome. The council approved the motion by a 5-1 vote with Andersen voting no.

Kerry Webster, administrative assistant for the Bering Sea Women's Group asked the council to approve a donation from the city of $15,000 in the current fiscal year, as in past years. Webster requested the funds in a letter dated Jan. 10, noting that she had failed to submit a request for the funds last April. Andersen asked Bahnke to send a letter to the BSWG with a request for the organization's budget. He said he had made the request in a public forum and had asked two BSWG representatives for the budget, but had received no response.

The Reader's Digest informed the city of its campaign called "We Hear You America," which awards more than $5 million in funds and promotional support to 100 towns and cities across the nation to promote tourism, civic works, job growth and economic development. Councilwoman Mary Knodel suggested that the city and the Nome Chamber of Commerce participate in the campaign.

Proposed ordinances

Andersen asked Acting City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck for first readings of proposed ordinances to amend each of five FY20II city budgets. He also asked her for first readings of a proposed ordinance to change the order of the business agenda for the council's regular meetings, and a proposed ordinance to slightly amend the exceptions to the hours of sale of alcoholic beverages within the city.

The proposed ordinances to amend FY2011 city budgets are accompanied by documents showing adjustments to the General Fund Municipal Budget, Capital Projects Fund Budget, Special Revenue Fund Budget, Port of Nome Fund Budget and Capital Projects Fund Budget.

The proposed ordinance to amend the order of business for regular meetings of the council—Section 2.15.070(a)(4)(B) in the Nome Code of Ordinances—would add an "Approval of agenda" to each meeting agenda; reword the agenda item, "Citizen's grievances and requests" to read "Citizen's comments"; and provide two opportunities for citizen's comments instead of one.

The proposed ordinance to amend an ordinance that specifies exceptions to the hours of sale of alcoholic beverages within the city — NCO Section 3.05.040(c) — would delete the words "in January" from the following sentence. "On the Sunday of the Bering Sea Open Golf tournament and on the Sunday in January known as 'Super Bowl Sunday,' liquor establishments described in subsection (b) of this section are authorized to open at 10 a.m."

Council members voted unanimously and without discussion to pass all seven proposed ordinances to second reading, a public hearing and final action at the regular council meeting on Feb. 14.

Facility fee waivers

The council also unanimously approved requests from the American Cancer Society for use of Old St. Joe's Hall for Relay for Life events from 4 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. on Feb. 9 and from noon May 14 to 6 a.m. May 15. The fee waivers are valued at $75 for use of the facility on Feb. 9, and $250 for its use May 14-15.

City manager report

The following information is derived from Bahnke's written report to the council.

• The Nome Recreation Center ceiling project was put out to bid Jan. 13, a pre-bid conference was held Jan. 19, and bids are due Feb. 1.

• Bahnke executed a contract with PND Engineers Inc. for a Nome ramp dock design study on Jan. 11. The Nome Port Commission prioritized the study in the FY2011 budget with council approval. The study will provide 15 percent concept drawings for three options and rough cost estimates for each of them. The Port Commission will gather public comment before moving to the next design phase.

• Bahnke met with Department of Transportation and Public Facilities officials Howard Thies, northern region director, and Evan Booth, maintenance supervisor on Jan. 18 to formalize agreements on road ownership and maintenance within municipal boundaries. DOT/PF plans to transfer rights of way for the Nome Bypass Road to the city when the project is complete. It was confirmed that the state owns the sidewalks on Front Street and will request equipment for snow removal and maintenance in the next budget cycle.

• The city's lobbyist has arranged for Michels, Stiles and Utility Manager John Handeland to meet with Sen. Donny Olson, Rep. Neal Foster and other legislators in Juneau on Jan. 27-28. Tentative meetings have been arranged with the commissioner of the Department of Administration and the deputy commissioner of DOT/PF to discuss a proposed state office building in Nome.

• Activities related to a review of the city's sales tax ordinance include (1) a review of merchant files with an emphasis on out-of-town exemptions; (2) preparation of a compliance circular to all merchants to identify areas of concern resulting from audits; (3) preparation of a memo to the council with suggested revisions to sections of the ordinance; and (4) communication with merchants regarding gaming activities. Plans call for revision of the ordinance by the council followed by preparation of a sales tax administration desk manual and revision of the sales tax form.

Knodel requested that the council discuss the sales tax ordinance review prior to the regular council meeting scheduled Feb. 14. Council members were unable to select a date when all of them can attend, so they asked Bahnke to schedule a work session on Tuesday or Thursday of next week.

Library report

Marguerite La Riviere, director of the Kegoayah Kozga Library, noted in a report to Bahnke that the University of Alaska library sent one of its employees, Billijo Link, to Nome last fall to catalog the remainder of the library's rare books and pamphlets. Link provided the assistance through a grant UAA received to locate and catalog Alaskana in libraries statewide, she added.

La Riviere said the Alaska State Library applied for an Alaska Online with Libraries (OWL) Broadband grant to help all Alaska public libraries enhance the quality of broadband on public access computer terminals. As part of the grant, the Alaska State Library received a travel grant from the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation and the Rasmuson Foundation to send every director of an Alaska public library to an OWL launch meeting in December in Anchorage, she added.

The Alaska State Library proposes to provide the Nome library with two computers, library furniture, video conference equipment and bandwidth support valued at $33,108, La Riviere reported.

In the last six months of 2010, the Kegoayah Kozga Library logged 4,799 computer sessions and circulated 7,651 library materials, according to La Riviere. Knodel complimented La Riviere for services the library provides and noted that circulation numbers for library materials are way up.

Visitor Center report

Mike Cavin, director of the Convention and Visitor's Bureau, said the council soon will receive a summary of the bureau's activities and achievements for 2010 in a quarterly report. Noting that he recently completed his first year with the bureau, he thanked all of those who provided input and help to him. He said his staff has recorded a large volume of data about Nome's visitors that show most of them are Alaskans. Australia, Canada, England and Germany are the top four countries in numbers of Nome visitors from outside the United States, he added.

Cavin said he and his staff have lined up 30 hosts to accommodate more than half of about 100 people who plan to attend the 2011 Iditarod Sled Dog Race and are seeking housing. He said the bureau found 43 hosts for Iditarod visitors in 2010, and there is time to find more hosts for this year's race. The bureau staff is developing an Iditarod events calendar, he added.

Citizen's comments

Mitch Erickson said he recently asked Nome Police Chief John Papasodora what the city can do to help retain police officers. Erickson said housing is tight in Nome. He suggested that the city build a two-plex or four-plex to house police officers, adding that a grant program is available for that purpose.

Erickson offered to gather information on construction costs and identify funding sources for a building to house police officers. Andersen and Knodel expressed approval of his offer.

Councilmen Jerald Brown and Randy Pomeranz attended the meeting in addition to Andersen, Knodel, Stiles and West.

Nome Rotary Club offers to adopt East End Park

By Sandra L. Medearis

Drive by East End Park and it looks forlorn with its lone outhouse and empty picnic shelter. Or pass by and it looks like a small wilderness and wetland. From either perspective, browsing musk oxen appear to use the park more often than humans.

This could change if Nome Rotary Club and the City of Nome sign a land use agreement now in the works. Nome Rotary, a volunteer service organization, has been crafting a vision for some months to make the park more inviting to year-around-recreation, including walking, bird-watching, skiing, iceskating and winter race sports. The Rotarians' proposal, to be funded and maintained wholly by the club, will go before the Nome Common Council next month for public comment and approval by the panel.

East End Park lies at the intersection of East Front Street and Bypass Road, and covers four city blocks surrounding a pond.

Still in the planning stage, stemming from discussions among the Nome Rotary park committee, the city manager and Chip Leeper, head of the city's Department of Parks and Recreation, future development plans under consideration include:

• A scenic gravel surface walking path around the pond constructed to avoid disturbance of the wetland could join other paths using easements to connect the Swanberg's Dredge, new hospital and other points of interest with remembrances of the mining and King Island Native Community histories of the area.

• Another path could lead from the picnic pavilion to a viewing platform at the southwest edge of the pond for observing the rich and varied population of waterfowl.

• Several organizations are focusing on the need for a playground at the far eastern end of town. A portion of this park area away from the roads could be considered, say Nome Rotarians.

• Maintain outhouses for year around use. Install signs with historical information and erect a park sign to make the area tourist-friendly.

• Maintain a parking lot to facilitate using the park as a staging area for winter activities—snow machine race start, sled dog race start, iceskating on the pond, cross-country skiing and snowshoeing trail heads.

• Plant several hardy trees or establish a plaque as a memorial to the late Tom Busch, a long-serving member of Nome Rotary for 27 years and community humanitarian who established Radio KNOM.

• The Nome Rotary Club is prepared to be friends of the park, to hold twice yearly cleanup chores and general care of the site as well as add gravel for better drainage, paint the outhouse and volleyball poles and repair existing picnic facilities, according to a memo the city received from the club. The park received use by the King Island community in earlier times. For a period, local volunteers from Little Sisters of Jesus took care of the park.

The city has published legal notice that it is considering the disposal of the public land via a 10-year land use permit to the Nome Rotary Club for provision of recreational services to the whole community. The club would need to coordinate activities with the Department of Parks and Recreation subject to approval of the city manager. Because this would be a nonexclusive revocable land use permit, the value would be less than $25,000. The required ordinance is slated to come before the council for first reading at its regular meeting Feb. 14 at which time, by law, no public comment will be accepted. If the Council passes the measure into second reading, public comment will be taken at the Feb. 28 council meeting. Information on the issue is available at the city clerk's office. After approval, the permit could be cancelled by the city with a 30-day notice.

(Editor's note: Reporter Sandra Medearis is a member of the Nome Rotary Club.)

public open house with the finalists. In addition to setting a timeline, the board decided on a number of parameters for the search. Candidates will be accepted from both within and outside of Alaska. Reeves pointed out that Alaska is currently faring better economically than most of the other states in the nation, making the district potentially attractive to out-of-state candidates. "We have seen in last two years many qualified mid-career professionals look for work in Alaska," he said. "I know from other current searches that we will continue to see that."

The board decided that those applying from within the district would follow the same process as those from outside.

The board also asked to put an emphasis on candidates who have experience in school district finance and curriculum development. Members said they wanted community relations and communication to be stressed as important traits. The board also wanted to ensure that candidates would know the importance they are placing on carrying out the district's strategic plan adopted last year as well as the implementation of a new reading initiative for the elementary school.

The board settled on setting a salary range of $95,000 to $105,000 for the position and listing an offer of up to $5,000 in moving expenses for the successful candidate. The district currently offers $3,000 to new teachers moving to Nome from outside of Alaska and $1,500 to new teachers from within the state. Wehde's oneyear offer came with a salary of $95,000 plus housing.

Participating in the conversation by telephone, the AASB's Reeves said other school districts comparable in size to Nome, such as Valdez and Cordova, are paying their superintendents in the range of $106,000 to $110,000 a year. "I would urge you to consider a range that went over the $100,000 mark," he told the board.

Nome is not the only district conducting a search for a new superintendent. Reeves said the AASB plans to finish a search for the Hydaburg School District in late February. He said the organization will also start a search soon for the Yukon Flats School District.

Tensions evident

In addition to discussion how they will go about selecting a new superintendent, the board also verbally sparred a bit over the events that led to the search. Board member Barb Nickels, who has been vocal in her dismay at the board's one-year offer to Wehde, asked if the board could have a public discussion over the rationale for the offer. "I think we should have a discussion as to why he was offered a one-year contract, she said.

Nickels' suggestion did not gain much traction with the majority of the board. "I don't think any discussion that was taken in executive session should be taken out of executive session," said fellow board member Barb Amarok. Board president Gloria Karmun also expressed no desire to make public any of the discussion held in private a week before the Jan. 18 meeting. Board member Marie Tozier did not signal any sign of wanting to revisit the issue.

Board member Betsy Brennan said she would be open to discussing the reasons the board offered Wehde a one-year extension without necessarily revealing what went on in the closed-door meeting. Brennan also reminded the board that if all agreed, including Wehde, they could make public the proceedings that occurred in the executive session. It was clear that any such accord would not be forthcoming. Wehde was not present at the Jan. 18 meeting.

Nickels also made the suggestion that executive sessions be recorded. "There are many school boards and organizations that record executive sessions even though it is not for the public," she said. Tozier disagreed, saying she believed the majority of school boards did not do so. Brennan noted that the Anchorage School Board records their executive sessions. The discussion over recording the sessions ended there.

Brennan also read a typed statement she wrote regarding the superintendent evaluation process. Brennan said board members needed to have better communication with the superintendent and not bring up concerns or criticisms solely at board meetings. "I'm wondering how many times us as board members have asked to meet with Jon Wehde or to bring up complaints or concerns in person," she asked. "It's a twoway street. It's our job to lead this district. If we have concerns, we need to bring those to administrators right away.

Brennan also expressed frustration at how the events unfolded at the previous meeting. "I feel really strongly that we took an enormous step backward last week," she said. Nickels agreed. "I would totally like to agree that evaluations for any position should not come as a surprise. I fell we as a whole board totally blindsided our superintendent, Nickels said.

Later in the meeting, Tozier addressed Brennan's statement. "I stand by the process we went through earlier in that executive session, and I'm not understanding your question," she said.

The discord between board members continued to be displayed as Karmun turned the discussion to Nickels and her public statements that she was planning to resign from the board. "I would like to know of your intent to resign from the board," Karmun asked Nickels.

"I've submitted nothing to you," Nickels responded.

"I'm just wondering because you made a grandstand on the radio," Karmun said.

"I didn't make a grandstand. You didn't hear my voice on the radio," Nickels responded.

Nickels had sent an e-mail to the Nome Nugget and KNOM radio in the hours following the Jan. 11 meeting stating that she intended to offer her resignation from the board the next day. The radio station included Nickels' announcement in its Jan. 12 news coverage. In the days that followed, Nickels backtracked from the statement, saying she had not offered any official notice to Karmun and was reconsidering her announcement. Judging by her statements at the Jan. 18 meeting, it appeared Nickels had decided to remain on the board.

The less-than-cordial back-andforth continued between the board members as Nickels questioned whether Amarok had a conflict of interest in teaching a class at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus geared to new teachers in the district. To be certified as a teacher in Alaska, educators must have taken three credits of what state statute refers to as "Alaska Studies." Amarok's class, "Alaska Native Education," is geared to allow area teachers to meet that requirement in Nome without having to take a correspondence class. Teachers can work under a provisional contract for up to two years while obtaining the credits.

Nickels questioned the appropriateness of Amarok evaluating the teachers in a classroom setting since she also votes on their contracts as a member of the school board. "I feel what a board member teaching, whatever is said in the classroom could be taken as a directive," Nickels said.

Amarok said she had brought up the issue before and believed any questions over conflict of interest were settled. "It was determined at a board meeting here that it was fine," she said. Amarok did broach the subject at the July 13, 2010 meeting, asking if it could potentially create a conflict of interest. Wehde at the time said he did not believe it would pose a problem. Karmun suggested notifying the City of Nome and the lieutenant governor's office of her intent to teach the class while remaining on the school board.

At the Jan. 18 meeting, Karmun said she felt no conflict existed. "I like to think she could differentiate between her duties as a school board member and an instructor," Karmun said, noting she did not want to pur-

Brennan said she did not know if teaching the class did or did not pose a conflict. She questioned Nickels on what she proposed as a resolution. "Are you saying you feel it would be appropriate for Barb [Amarok] to abstain [from voting on contracts] for just those students in her class?" Brennan asked. Nickels had mentioned such a situation as a possible remedy.

Tozier suggested asking outside sources for an opinion. "I don't know if it's a conflict, but I guess it wouldn't hurt to get an opinion from our attorney," she said.

Amarok noted that the class was set to begin in a couple of days after the meeting. Supposing the class was found to pose a conflict, Brennan said the impending start date should not pose a problem if the remedy was having Amarok abstain from voting on contracts of those enrolled in the class.

ALASKA COMMUNITY ACTION ON TOXICS (ACAT) is recruiting Pregnant

Women for a Breast Milk Pilot Study

ACAT is a non-profit organization based in Anchorage, AK. In this study, ACAT research team members will work together with residents of Alaska villages to measure levels of chemicals that may be harmful to their health. We are inviting villages to take part in a study to help us improve the health of babies by encouraging women to breastfeed, and by learning about the possible harmful chemicals that may be impacting the health of Native women and children. We are recruiting first-time mothers with babies between 2-8 weeks of age to take part in the study.

Many people in the villages and also scientists worry about the effects of chemicals on health. Some chemicals are found on old military bases. Some chemicals come to this area by wind or ocean currents from other parts of the world. The purpose of this research study is to learn more about how much of these chemicals are in the bodies of women and infants in rural Alaska. We also want to show the benefits of breastfeeding.

Participants will be given $40 for donating breast milk samples, and a $20 calling card for their time. Participants will be encouraged to breastfeed their babies and ACAT researchers will provide women with instructions for donating breast milk samples and educational materials that describe the benefits of breast milk. When we report back the results to your communities, participants names will be kept confidential.

If you want more information about the study, want to participate or know someone that might want to participate, please give us a call or email us. Thanks!

Fire destroys Galena school shop building

GALENA, (AP)— The entire village of Galena pitched in to help fight a fire that destroyed a school shop, even as temperatures plunged to 50 degrees below zero.

The unattached two-story shop building at the Sidney C. Huntington School caught fire last Saturday evening, The Fairbanks Daily News-Miner reported. City Manager Tom Corrigan said nearly all the village's 600 residents helped firefighters, mostly by helping them keep warm.

"There was an immediate, amazing response to the fire," Corrigan said.

"It was a full village turnout, and not people just looking. They were all helping, bringing coffee from their homes, extra gloves for the firefighters and making soup for the firefighters."

Villagers also brought their vehicles to give fire crews a place to

No one was hurt in the fire. Its cause is under investigation.

Corrigan said the temperatures made fighting the fire extremely difficult.

The village's tanker truck had to be heated and resupplied by another truck that shuttled water from a source several thousand feet away, he said.

School officials transferred classes usually held in the shop to the main school building about 50 feet away. The shop building had classes in automotive repair, carpentry, electrical metalworking.

The 5,000-square-foot shop was built in the late 1990s and did not have a sprinkler system.

Huntington School kindergarten through grade 12. It's one of two schools in the Yukon River community about 270 air miles west of Fairbanks.

Bethel gets new District Attorney

June Stein is the new district attorney for the Bethel region along with Evan Arendell as a new assistant district attorney. There are five assistant DA's in Bethel already. Stein is a former district attorney for the Kenai Peninsula, and has been a prosecutor for more than 20 years. Recently she had been an assistant attorney general with the Alaska Department of Law's Rural Prosecution Unit and had served periodically as an acting district attorney for the Bethel office. She teaches classes on such subjects as search and seizure, Miranda rights and sexual assault investigations for both the state troopers and village public safety officers at the Public Safety Academies in Sitka. Evan Arendell is a former prosecutor from rural New Mexico and is relocating to Bethel from Texas. He has two years experience in prosecuting both misdemeanors and felonies, and conducted regular seminars for law enforcement personnel.

Alaska Redistricting board

As the 2010 U.S. Census is completed, the Alaska Redistricting Board is now in its first stages of redrawing the state's legislative election district based on Census numbers. In order to inform Alaskans about the redistricting process, the board launched a website http://www.akredistricting.org. The site at this point is very technical and features very little content. The board announced that over the next few months, it would add new content, features and improved navigation on the site.

Alaska's unemployment rate hits 8.1 percent

AP- Alaska's unemployment rate rose to 8.1 percent last month, up slightly from November. The state labor department says the state's seasonally adjusted rate remains lower than the national average, which hit 9.4 percent in December. Alaska's rate was up from 8 percent in November. In December 2009, the rate stood at 8.6 percent.

Two Fairbanksans appointed to University Regents

Mike Powers and Jyotsna "Jo" Heckman, both of Fairbanks are the newest members to the University of Alaska Board of Regents. The regents govern the University of Alaska system and are charged with appointing the president. Outgoing regents are Cynthia Henry and Erik Drygas.

Heckman is the president of Denali State Bank. She graduated from the University of Alaska Fairbanks and has served on the UAF Chancellor's Advisory Board and the UAF Vision Taskforce. Powers is the chief executive officer of Fairbanks Memorial Hospital and Denali Center.

Three charged with wildlife crimes

A federal grand jury in Anchorage indicted three men from Tennessee, Alaska and Florida for illegally selling wildlife parts. George Jia, 43, a resident of Tennessee, is charged with illegally selling a raw walrus tusk, purchasing and selling a polar bear hide, and selling the foot of a black rhinoceros in 2009. The black rhinoceros is one of the most endangered animals in Africa and protected by the Endangered Species Act. The polar bear was listed as an endangered species in 2008; the black rhino has been listed as an endangered species since 1980. Michael Smith, 36, of Sitka is accused of illegally selling two tanned sea otter pelts. Jack Dickerson, 35, of Florida, is charged in a third indictment with two counts of violating the Lacey Act and two counts of Identity Theft in connection with son legally took a brown bear in Alaska Game Management Unit 9. But after that hunt, Dickerson couldn't legally hunt again in Game Management Unit 9 for the next four regulatory years. In 2008 and 2009, Dickerson returned to Alaska and hunted brown bears in Game Management Unit 9 using the identity, name and birth date of another person.

Alaska's first First Lady died

Neva Egan, the wife of Alaska's first Governor William Egan, died last week at the Juneau Pioneer Home. She was 96 years old. Neva McKittrick was born in Wilson, Kan., on Oct. 3, 1914, in a family of five children. She moved to Alaska in the 1930s and taught school in Valdez where she met Bill Egan. In 1969 she underwent surgery for uterine cancer. Neva Egan was preceded in death by her infant daughter and her husband William in 1984. She leaves behind her son, state Sen. Dennis Egan and his family.

State opens disaster assistance center in Savoonga

By Diana Haecker

The State of Alaska Division of Homeland Security and Emergency Management has opened a disaster assistance center in Savoonga to help residents with filing for damages after the New Year's week-long power outage. The outage resulted in burst water pipes in many homes and prompted first the city of Savoonga and then the State to issue a disaster declaration. The disaster assistance center is set up at the Savoonga City Hall. State workers are there to help people with eligible damages to their homes to use the state's individual and family grant program. The state has a Siberian-Yupik translator on board. Applicants should bring a description of damages, ownership documents for damaged property and insurance information. The disaster assistance center is open until Jan. 29.

A rare combination of open ocean water and heavy winds caused salt spray to deposit on power lines. The salt caused arcing and interrupted the power supply to the majority of the village. As a result of freezing temperatures, water and sewer lines froze, ruptured, and flooded the interior of privately owned homes, public buildings, and regional housing authority properties.

Kasilof's Paul Gebhardt wins Kusko 300 by a minute

Hometown musher Mike Williams Jr. of Akiak comes in second, hot on Gebhardt's heels

By Diana Haecker

Kasilof musher Paul Gebhardt, 54, had a literal run for his money when he won the Kuskokwim 300 just one minute ahead of Akiak's Mike Williams Jr.

The two teams raced in -70°F windchill conditions. Despite the biting cold, a big crowd welcomed them to the finish line in Bethel on Sunday morning. Third place finisher was Pete Kaiser of Bethel. Race headquarters director Sarah Angstman said the locals were excited to see two Bethel-area teams finish in the top three. This, she said, hasn't happened in the race's history.

Gebhardt has run the Kuskokwim 300 eight times, but never won the race. This year, he said, he put his team on cruise control and "away they went." In what race organizers described as a fast, icy trail up to Kalskag and back to Bethel, Gebhardt finished the race in an elapsed time of 39 hours, 17 minutes and 20 seconds and won $20,000. Exactly one minute later, 25-year-old Mike Williams Jr., son of Iditarod veteran Mike Williams Sr., crossed the finish line and took home $15,000. Kaiser finished an hour and 36 minutes after Williams for a purse of $10,000.

Martin Buser, Ramey Smyth, Mitch Seavey, John Baker, Hugh Neff, Matthew Failor and Jake Berkowitz rounded out the top 10. Twenty mushers ran the race, with only one musher, Louie Ambrose scratching. Mike Williams Sr. came in after 54 hours and seven minutes on the trail. This year's red lantern musher is Bruce Linton, who finished on Monday afternoon.

Race officials say the race has been windy and cold from the beginning. Teams coming in late Sunday night had to also contend with a ground blizzard. Kuskokwim 300 Finishers

Elementary JNYO athletes perform well at state

By Joni Earp

The Nome Elementary School Wolverines were on fire last Friday evening.

The Nome Junior Native Youth Olympics program was able to send a team to state for the first time in the history of Nome NYO. Six Nome students competed in three events, the One-Foot High Kick, the Alaskan High Kick, and the Scissor Broad Jump. Ivory Okleasik, Josh Bourdon, Michael Scott, Josh Cannon, Wilson Bourdon and Kimberly Clark competed against more than 200 students from around the state. The Nome team got many comments on how the team all worked together and were supportive of each other during the meet.

Okleasik and Bourdon walked away from the competition with three top-three finishes. Okleasik kicked her way to the top in One-Foot High Kick placing second in state at the height of 74 inches. Ivory was the only girl in the event to have a perfect jumping record, making all of her kicks without any misses. She learned her lesson earlier, placing third in the Alaskan High Kick due to three missed kicks at lower heights. Ashley Mute from Bethel matched Okleasik in height; however, she kicked with greater accuracy, recording no misses in the event.

Josh Bourdon placed second in the Alaskan High Kick and was in the top 10 for the One-Foot High Kick. Josh kicked to a height of 64 inches in the One-Foot and tested his limits as he bettered his height from our Nome competition by 12 inches. Bourdon did not waiver in his focus during his events, and was a fierce competitor.

Wilson Hoogendorn, Michael Scott and Josh Cannon were all in the final rounds of competition. It was evident that the team was prepared both mentally and physically for their events. The Nome team had a good following with a large hometown crowd of displaced Nomeites coming to watch. JNYO official Nicole Johnson of Nome was proud to see a group from her hometown.

The team would like to thank Sitnasuak Native Corp. for their continued support of Nome Native Youth Olympics. Thank you also to families that were able to make the trip to watch students compete to the best of their abilities.

Boys go back and forth at Alaska Prep Shootout

For the second straight week, the Nome boys basketball team bumped up against squads from much bigger schools, as they played to a mixed record in a large Anchorage tournament.

Playing last weekend at the Alaska Prep Shootout, the Nanooks again gained the upper hand over Class 4A school Ketchikan, beating them 68-49 on Jan. 21. Nome, however, was unable to outpace two other Class 4A schools, Bartlett and tourney host Dimond, who handed the Nanooks their second and third losses of the season.

In their first match of the tournament, the Nanooks received an 81-64 bruising from Bartlett on Thursday night. Nome got a sluggish start out of the gate, falling behind 19-9 in the first quarter. Bartlett is ranked No. 2 among the state's large schools' teams. The Nanooks were able to pull within four points by half time but lost that momentum by the third quarter when Bartlett went on a 31-10 run. Christian Leckband led the way for Nome with 34 points, followed by Tim Sullivan with 13 and Nathan Blandford with 11.

The Nanooks bounced back the next night against Ketchikan with a win. Nome outscored Ketchikan in every quarter of the game and played an especially strong third quarter. Leckband, who led all scorers with 24 points, put up 18 points in the second half. Sullivan was good for 14 points and David Stickel scored 13, eight of which came in the third. Nome had defeated Ketchikan the previous week at the Alaska Airlines Winter Classic tournament.

As Nome entered the fourth quarter of its final game of the Alaska Prep Shootout, it looked like they may have been on their way to toppling their second Class 4A team in a row. A late-game rally by Dimond put any such dreams to rest. The Nanooks held a 50-44 lead at the end of the third before Dimond went on a 24-13 run in the fourth to put the game on ice with a final of 68-61. There were bright spots in the loss as Sullivan connected an unprecedented eight times from beyond the three-point line, setting a school record for Nome. Sullivan scored a total of 26 for the game, as did Leckband.

For a change, Nome will play at home this Thursday, facing Shishmaref in a game that kicks off the Norton Sound Shootout that takes Nome's varsity squad will play Shishmaref as a sort of exhibition game at 6:30 p.m. before the tourney starts in earnest with Nome's junior varsity boys playing Scammon Bay at 8 p.m. In addition to Shishmaref Scammon Bay and Nome's JV team, St. Michael, Brevig Mission and a team made up of players from Shugnak, Kobuk and Ambler will also participate in the tourney. (A full tournament schedule can be found in this week's coverage of Nome girls basketball.)

After Thursday's game, the Nome varsity team will only play two more home games this season.

Lady Nanooks take two at home

The Nome Lady Nanooks went two for two in another successful home stand last weekend against Hooper Bay.

The lopsided match was apparent in the first quarter of Friday night's game as Nome took off with a 21-2 run against the visiting Warriors in the first quarter. The Nanooks would continue to pour it on in the game that ended with a final score of 58-10. Hooper Bay was unable to get their offense to click in the game, barely putting up numbers in each quarter.

Freshman Shayla Johnson led the way for Nome with a 16-point game, followed by Dylan Johnson who added a baker's dozen with 13. Renee Lammer and Devynn Johnson each added eight points in the win.

While the Warriors were able to boost their scoring effort in Saturday night's game, Nome was able to respond in kind making for another wide gap on the scoreboard. The Nanooks took the game 67-29. The game got off to nearly the same start as the previous night's match-up with Nome putting up 20 points in the first quarter to Hooper Bay's two. The Warriors' offense woke up a bit in the second, scoring 10 to Nome's 12 points for the quarter. The damage was already done, however, and Nome continued to outpace Hooper Bay for the remainder of the game.

Every player from Nome got in on the scoring action in Saturday rematch. Lammer and Johnson led the way for the Lady Nanooks, each scoring 10 points. Kaitlynn Gartung, Liz Luce and Devynn Johnson all had strong performances, each putting up eight points. Chloe Mattheis added seven and Dylan Johnson and Taylor Pomeranz each put up six points.

The pair of wins over the weekend put the Lady Nanooks season record at 7-5. The girls will again play at home this Thursday, taking on Scammon Bay at 5 p.m. to kick off the 2011 Norton Sound Showdown. The varsity girls' game against the visiting Blackbirds will be an expedition game and not count toward the tournament rankings. Scammon Bay's first official game of the tournament will come Friday at noon when they face a cooperative team from the villages of Shugnak, Kobuk and Ambler. The cooperative team is known by the name Up River. Nome will have junior varsity teams competing in the tournament in both the boys' and girls' brackets. In addition to the Up River squad and Scammon Bay, Teller will also field a team for the girls' side of the tournament. Games run from Thursday through Saturday.

How to treat dehydration caused by vomiting or diarrhea

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Viruses that cause vomiting and diarrhea are more prevalent this time of year. Doctors call this problem gastroenteritis or the stomach flu. While a brief bout of diarrhea or vomiting may be inconvenient or a little embarrassing, the dehydration that occurs from a severe case of the stomach flu can be life-threatening, especially in children.

One of the most significant causes of preventable death and illness worldwide is dehydration. The most common cause of dehydration is a gastrointestinal illness that results in a life-threatening loss of water from the body. The current cholera outbreak in Haiti, which has killed over a thousand people, is a good example. Cholera is rare in the far north, but many similar causes of diarrhea and vomiting are very common. These bacteria, viruses, and parasites are just as serious in causing dehydration in rural Alaska.

The World Health Organization estimates that 1.7 million children under age five die every year from dehydration worldwide. Even in the United States diarrheal disease leads to 220,000 hospitalizations (10 percent of all pediatric hospitalizations) and 400 pediatric deaths annually.

Fortunately, life-threatening dehy-dration can be easily prevented if the problem is identified early and treated using a safe, inexpensive, easy-to-prepare oral rehydration solution (special drink given by mouth). In fact, 93-96 percent of children who receive oral rehydration early in the course of an illness never require hospitalization or I.V. fluid replacement.

Commercially available oral rehydration solutions, like Pedialyte, are available at most grocery stores.

A standard rehydrating sports drink, like Gatorade, can be turned into a rehydration solution by mixing 8 ounces of the sports drink with 8 ounces of water and adding a ¼ teaspoon of salt. This gives the solution roughly the same electrolyte concentration as Pedialyte.

In remote regions like rural Alaska, the need for rehydration often occurs at times when pre-made solutions are not available. In these cases, a simple recipe may be used to make an oral rehydration solution (ORS) out of ingredients commonly found at home. Here is the recipe:

• Start with a 16-ounce cup of clean drinking water.

• Add ½ teaspoon of salt (mix and taste the solution to ensure it is no saltier than tears).

• Add one tablespoon of sugar and mix. Squeeze in and mix the juice and pulp from a citrus fruit like an orange, lemon, or lime. Banana puree, mango juice, or even blueberry juice may be used in a pinch.

Rehydration should begin at the first sign of increased fluid loss from diarrhea, vomiting, or sweating with fever.

In general, the best dose of any one of the oral rehydration solutions is ½ cup for children under 20 pounds and one cup for children over 20 pounds given after each loose stool or episode of vomiting. Adults may tolerate higher doses.

The trick is to give the solution slowly. One to two teaspoons given every five minutes is a tolerable rate for most ill children because it allows for rehydration without causing vomiting from expansion of the stomach. Even when a child vomits during oral fluid replacement, if given in small sips, much of the oral rehydration solution makes it past the stomach.

Children under age 6 months or any child with diarrhea or vomiting associated with fever over 102° F should seek medical help. Other signs of more serious illness associated with dehydration include: blood in the stool, frequent diarrhea or vomiting, mental status changes, severe lethargy, or failure to tolerate oral rehydration. A child having these symptoms should see a medical provider as soon as possible.

Healing And Forgiving Go Hand In Hand By Rev. Ross Tozzi Saint Joseph Catholic Church For the Nome Ministerial Association

The Gospels are full of stories of Jesus offering healing to those in need. While I doubt that any of us is a miracle worker, we all have the capacity to offer help to those in need. A silent prayer, a helping hand, a willingness to listen, a compassionate response, a random act of generosity can all play a part in helping a person in need of healing.

Time and time again in our lives, there will be situations that are more than we can handle alone. There is a natural impulse to keep problems to ourselves and try to work things out on our own. In some cases this may work but in others, trying to handle difficulties all alone can be overwhelming. In times of great strain and tragedy, we need to let go of our pride and ask God and our neighbors for help.

I recall the story of a woman who was very ill and sought the best medical help available to her. Technically the surgery (performed at a large hospital in a big city) was successful. Nevertheless, the woman still felt ill and weak after receiving the best medical care possible. It had been years since she practiced her faith . . . but in desperation she reached out to God and received a miraculous healing. Actually it was a threefold miracle. First there was a physical healing. The second miracle was a spiritual healing. Her faith was reinvigorated by the support and help she received from total strangers. She felt alive because of the way others cared for her. The third miracle was her desire to help others in kind. Now she wanted to look beyond her own narrow focus and reach out to help others.

We can learn a thing or two about healing from Jesus. He strived to make a person whole by healing both the body and the soul. Recall the man who was lowered through the roof by friends so that his infirmity could be brought to the attention of Jesus. Jesus first offered to forgive the man's sins before taking care of his paralysis (Mark 2:1-12). Our willingness to forgive others is a powerful way to offer healing to others.

And yet, there is that natural impulse not to forgive. We may want an eye for an eye, or a tooth for a tooth. Time and time again in our lives, there will be situations where we feel too hurt to forgive. Here again, the weight and strain of holding on to our pain can overwhelm us. At times like these, we need to let go and forgive others as we have been forgiven. Letting go, rather than holding on to hurt, is beneficial for ourselves as well as the person we forgive.

Obituary

Stanley L. Sobocienski 1935 – 2011

Longtime Nome resident Stanley Louis Sobocienski died January 22, 2011 at the St. Elias Specialty Hospital in Anchorage, with his wife Balla at his side.

Stanley was born to immigrant parents Stanley and Leda Sobocienski on February 1, 1935, in Lorain, Ohio. Stanley's father died when he was very young, and he often told stories of working odd jobs as a young child for family members to make ends meet following the Great Depression.

As a young adult, Stan was a member of the Merchant Marines and sailed the Great Lakes. He was very proud of this accomplishment and always made sure that he had his Merchant Marine card with him.

Upon joining the Air Force in the mid-1950s, Stanley was shipped to Nome to work at the White Alice site on Anvil Mountain. When he was discharged from the Air Force he became a permanent Nome resident.

Stan was an entrepreneur, and ran many businesses within the community. In the 1960s, he was part owner in Green's, a local fuel delivery business. In the 1970s he was owner of Alaska Cab, from which he proudly operated a limousine to pick up passengers from the Alaska Airlines and Wien Air Alaska terminals. His prized accomplishment was being the proprietor of the Bering Sea Saloon, which he purchased in 1970 and continued to operate until his health deteriorated in 2009.

Stan was a long time member of the Nome Joint Utility Board and was a member of community and statewide organizations such the Bering Sea Lions Club, the Nome Bar Owners Association, CHARR, the Alaska Democratic Party, and as an Alaska Airlines Board Member.

Stan took great pride in his Polish and Italian heritage, always attending family reunions to share his many stories about family near and far.

Stan requested that his family not hold a memorial service in his honor, as he had a strong dislike of attending such events. Instead, he asked that he be cremated, with his ashes spread in three specific places – the Bering Sea; Kailua-Kona, HI; and on the graves of his father and mother.

In addition, he asked that his friends have a shot of "good Irish whiskey" in his memory.

Stanley was preceded in death by his parents Stanley Sobocienski and Leda Denka; his former wife Valerie Sobocienski; and his son Tony Keller.

He is survived by his loving wife, Balla; his daughters Chugie and Becka; his sons Jay and Colo; Balla's children Doania, Jerry, Sheila, Benjamin and Robert; his sister and brother-in-law Cheryl and Edward Sanders, and their children Ed, Pat and Tammy; and his grandchildren in whom he took great pride.

Especially the two who called to tell me that they voted for me, because one of you had signed the "un-famous" recall petition on me, I thank you the most. Your mind had cracked open to see what is real. Perhaps it was the honest struggle to make ends meet that allowed your mind to crack open, even just a hair. Whatever it was, do things to keep it open and to make that crack wider.

Dear Editor,

Respectfully to all, I write some information for the residents/citizens of Golovin and maybe others in the villages in similar situations.

Before Christmas I was pushing the city clerk and council to get our shop fixed and heated for use/rental. I was told by the mayor "$10/day for lights and use." No heat! I asked that the heater be fixed, "need parts," waiting for parts. I needed to work indoors and not outdoors at 20° below! That's what the shop is for, isn't it? Anyway on about December 28, a new laser heater arrived and my son Walter was hired to install it. I knew he would have problems-no training or experience. I told the City Clerk this and said if he did not get the heater going, I would. Two days later still no heat so I went to work with my own tools and torch. I thawed the fuel line, was solid ice, and fixed kinks in the copper tubing installed by a previous worker. I got heater working fine. It took four days to warm the building, concrete foundation and floor. About the third day I put my snowmachine in the building to thaw and warm before I could install new parts which I had ordered.

I also submitted a written report to City office and copies for all council. I asked every council member that I be permitted to use the shop instead of cash payment. I also submitted a time sheet and asked that my pay be rated at $20/hour. The next day I was informed that another employee had been paid $30/hour for some installation work on another building. That's what he gets paid-no mater what work he does. I tried to discuss this use of the shop and the only thing I got was "You pay up front" "at $40/day and $10/day after that." I asked if this was the new policy? "It always was that way." Not so-when we built the shop in 1986, city council only asked for a flat use fee of $10/day and the shop was well used then. I asked the city clerk about the difference in pay and I should have been paid an equal amount. Only answer was -unauthorized work.

On January 12, 2011, I was cheerily told by an office worker—"your check is ready." I asked for what? I didn't expect a paycheck. I signed the check and my spouse brought it to get cashed at the store and was told by the mayor, "Tommy better sign it and turn it in the city office to pay shop rental." The worker didn't know what was going on. I turned the check in-don't want to get arrested

Then on 13 January I received a bill from city to pay $110 rental fee for use of the shop!

Anyway, my wife Kathy who was the city clerk for many years off and on had already submitted her resignation/retirement form to the city and was awaiting council to declare a new city clerk. At the last meting of the city on January 11, the Mayor retired the meeting to executive session to settle the problem of Walter, Thomas, and Kathy Punguk-what an honor(?).

After the meeting Kathy submitted her resignation again effective—now—tired of the gossip going on by (?) and (?). So!

My message for the residents of Golovin about your leaders: City government affairs are run by one person—I think without the input or even awareness of other council members. Minutes of meetings may not tell the whole truth. No council member opposes a mayor that permits any opposition or even discussion. Rental rates and pay rates are set without council approval or even following ordinances.

Shop/garage/equipment rates have been raised to be out of reach for those of us who would like to rent them. Rates are raised to cover expenses-and inflated salary for a person who was apby sister-in-law mother-in-law-city clerk who was appointed by daughter-mayor.

This is the ultimate irony of nepotism. Yet it goes on and on and on, same Golovin employees. Thomas E. Punguk and Katherine Punguk Golovin, AK 99762

Dear Editor,

I would like to inform your readers of an incident that took place in St. Michael on Christmas Eve night, during the IRA Christmas program. My family and I were attending the program, enjoying the play. When my wife got up to take a turn to tell the kids to be quiet and behave so the rest of us and the elders can hear the program, one kid talked back to her and yelled out, "Make me, Shorty!" I asked my wife who that kid was. She told me to forget about it. The kid's grandparents, who raised him, were sitting in front of us and did nothing. So I told my son who is less than a year older than this kid (15), to go have a talk with him about his manners.

Later on my son confronted this kid and told him not to talk to his mother like that. This kid got mouthy with my son, so my son grabbed him to make a point. This kid started calling him names and saying, "Your mom started it first!" So my son threw him down and told him not to talk back to his mom.

Ten to 15 minutes later this kid's grandma came in with this kid behind her. She was pointing in my boy's face, verbally cussing him out, calling him names while her grandson was calling my boy white trash and other racial Then this lady punched my kid in the side of the head. I told my son not to touch or hit her, that we would press charges. She than picked up a metal folding chair and hit my son with it. At this point my wife and stepdaughter stepped in. This lady tried to push past them to hit my son and ended up hitting my wife. Then my wife and stepdaughter held their ground and pushed her back. At this point a member of this lady's family stepped in and said "No

It's all right with this family when she was assaulting my son. But, when this woman was confronted by another adult the family member tried to stop it. This lady then proceeded to pick up another metal chair and threw it at my son. He jumped out of the way so it missed him. She still kept after in this behavior until it was finally broken up. Then she walked up to my wife and said, "You are a big fat lying mouth!" My wife never said anything. It was her mouthy grandson that started all this.

We immediately called the VPSO, it took him 30 to 40 minutes to show up due to a personal injury, which we understood. We told him exactly how it happened the same way we've explained it to you readers. He then asked my son where he was hit and if he was afraid. My son said he wasn't afraid of this lady. Then a little later he asked if he was hurt, and my son said no. This was about 45 minutes after the fact! He did not ask if it hurt when she punched you. Just asked if he was hurt 45 minutes later. He then said he would be in contact.

Two nights later the VPSO came over to our house and recorded this report. He said a trooper from Unalakleet was going to be in Stebbins the next day and would contact us. He also stated that the woman was looking at two assault charges possibly three for throwing the chair. I never heard anything back. So more then a week later, on January 4, 2011 I contacted the troopers office in Unalakleet. I asked him what was going on with this incident. And his first reply was he had no knowledge of it. I stated that we recorded the report with the VPSO and he said someone would contact us.

The trooper then said he recalled talking to the VPSO about it and said the kid was like 17 years old. I said no, he is only 15 years old. He then stated that an assault charge couldn't be made because the law requires two things before it can be an assault. He said first the victim has to be afraid. And my son stated he was not afraid of this lady. That is my fault, I teach my kids to be tough and not to cower behind an old lady like this other boy did. And two, he has to be hurt. I said of course it hurt him; he was punched in the head and hit with a metal

The trooper said my son stated he was not hurt. I said that was not the way he was questioned. I asked him if he had listened to the recorded interview because I wanted to know if those questions were on there. He had not received it yet. I said it's been over a week. The trooper said the VPSO was in Nome and wouldn't get it until he got back to St. Michael,. but that he would look into it.

He still said there couldn't be an assault charge, I was pretty mad and could not believe this woman could do this to a kid and get away with it.

I then asked what about the racial slurs coming from this kid and this woman's behavior. This isn't the first time this woman has acted in this manner. She has done nothing to discourage her grandson's remarks. And I've been told she's stormed into the school cussing out teachers, calling them white trash. So clearly there's some racism in this family.

The trooper said we might get her for misconduct. But we can only do that if it happened in public. Then he asked me "Did this happen at your residence?" At this point I was pissed. It was clear the VPSO never did his job. Maybe that's because he is going out with this woman's daughter. I don't know, I'll let you readers decide. I did make a point to tell this trooper that my anger was not directed toward him. It was directed at a law that would let this lady get away with this. I even apologized to my son for letting this happen to him. It is my job to protect my kids. I figure in this case involving a woman we would let the law handle it. That was clearly a mistake.

My first instinct was to not press charges. I do not care one bit about this woman, but there are some good people in that family. And I didn't want to be known as the guy who threw their mother or grandmother in jail. But, I did want the troopers involved and to do something about it. But, then we received so many calls from people in town concerned about our son and pretty much demanding we press charges.

I thought how sad it must be to live in a town so small and be disliked by so many. Maybe that's punishment enough.

Once again I'll let you readers decide, and to refer to my son as white trash. There has never been any white trash in my family. My parents worked hard and passed the traits onto me. I've been working for wages since I was 13 years old. I've been in the army, spent 17 years working in shipyards, freight yards, and tank farms; and I'm still employed. My boys have been hunting, trapping, and fishing since they were 4 years old. All my kids work hard. They are at the top of their class in school. They are well liked and respected by many. So to refer to someone in family as "white trash" is a remark I will not tolerate ever again.

The same time I sent this letter into the newspaper, I faxed a report into the Nome troopers office to see if anything can be done through them, because I'm clearly not getting anywhere on this end. I don't expect much but I will say this: I apologize to my son for standing by and letting this happen to him. If anyone ever lays a hand on my children in anger, or refers to anyone in my family as white trash again, you will be hearing from me again. Except next time my name will be in the back of this paper not on the front. For those of you who supported our family in this matter, we thank you.

I've lived in and around Alaska villages for a better part of my life and one thing I've learned: Those who are disliked the most always end up with the shallowest graves.

Dear Nancy,

I helped my daughter with announcing the birth of Kenai Ryder Hughes several issues ago and inadvertently left out other welcoming family members. They include aunts Dora Hughes and Hazel Kakaruk, uncles Jonathan Kakaruk and Frosty Hughes, great uncles Norbert Kakaruk and Kevin Isabell, great aunt Sarah Kakaruk and most of all, real proud great-grandfathers Alfred Sahlin and Kenneth Hughes, Jr. If I were to include any other members besides grandparents it should have been proud cousins in Teller — Angela, Kimberly and Noami Kakaruk. Thanks for including this letter in this issue and have a great week! Sandi Keller Nome, AK

LUNCH WITH A VIEW — A group of musk oxen congregate on a hilltop near Cape Nome in mid-January. A proposal may allow subsistence hunters to keep the horns of harvested bulls.

Board may do away with cutting of musk ox horns

By Tyler Rhodes

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game's practice of cutting horns from bull musk oxen taken in subsistence hunts may be facing a chopping block of its own.

The Alaska Board of Game plans to debate whether or not a hunter should be required to have the trophy value of their quarry destroyed in subsistence hunts at its spring meeting March 4-10 in Wasilla. The proposal, brought forward by the Board of Game, could bring an end to the practice that aims to keep hunters who primarily want a trophy from participating in a subsistence hunt.

Hunters who harvest a bull musk ox under the subsistence hunt on the Seward Peninsula currently face the prospect of having the animal's horns cut at or just above the eye level. Those who harvest animals in the areas near Nome's road system are required to have the horns cut from bulls within 72 hours of the kill. Animals harvested in the more remote areas of the region must have the horns cut if they are to be removed from the unit.

According to Fish and Game wildlife biologist Tony Gorn, the Department of Fish and Game will have no official recommendation supporting or opposing the proposal. "At this point, it's being brought to the board as more of a value-based, philosophical issue," Gorn said. "There's some people out there who believe you don't deface a trophy, it's disrespectful."

a trophy, it's disrespectful."

One person holding such a belief is Board of Game Chairman Cliff Judkins. "Requiring antlers, horns or any other part of a harvested animal to be destroyed or left in the field is contrary to Alaskans' customary and traditional practices," Judkins said. "It's just a custom I don't like to see taken away."

The terms "customary" and "traditional" are loaded words in the debate whether horns should be cut or not. According to Gorn, the Board of Game in 1997 set the stage for the musk ox subsistence hunt by issuing what is known as a positive customary and traditional use finding. Those findings, among other issues, decided that musk ox horns were not traditionally used as trophies.

Judkins, who brought the proposal to the board for consideration, believes bringing home and displaying horns or antlers from hunts is a longstanding practice for hunters from all over the state. "If you walk around Nome, Kotzebue, Shungnak, Aniak, Shishmaref, Fairbanks, Anchorage or any other town or village in Alaska, you will see antlers stacked on roofs, in front yards or mounted on walls,' Judkins said. "Why do hunters bring these items home? Maybe to brag a little bit. Maybe to show that they are a good hunter and provide for their families. In a few cases to decorate their wall and remind them of the hunt. This is the individual's right."

Judkins' opposition to the current practice stems not only from a philosophical stance, but from experience as well. "Personally I have taken caribou in Unit 13 where antlers had to be left in the field and musk ox in unit 22 where the horns had to cut off at the eve or left in the unit. In both cases I was hunting for meat; but, still, I would like to have brought the antlers and horns home," he said. Judkins said he has long opposed the practice of trophy destruction and his experience with the musk ox finally pushed him to bring the proposal to the board. "It was just the final blow," he said. The proposal would affect more than just musk ox hunts, including some moose hunts in Units 12, 21 and 24 where antler destruction is required.

The proposal does not sit well with Roy Ashenfelter, the chairman of the Northern Norton Sound Resource Advisory Committee. The advisory committees are local groups that provide input and recommendations to the Board of Game on wildlife and fishing resources. "We have real concerns about the timing of this meeting," he said, noting his disappointment that the proposal was to come up at a meeting held out of the region and not within the normal cycle in which Seward Peninsula issues are handled.

The advisory committee is scheduled to meet Feb. 8 in Nome, at which time Ashenfelter said the trophy destruction proposal will be discussed. While he could not predict for certain whether the board would support or object to the proposal, he said he believes the current system has worked well in terms of reaching harvest goals. "Why would you want to change something that is working even with the trophy destruction?" he asked.

The advisory committee meeting is open to the public and will be held at 9 a.m. on Feb. 8 in the Talialak Board Room in the Kawerak Building.

There are currently hunts where trophy destruction is not required. Drawing hunts for musk ox occur along the western edge and northwestern portion of the Seward Peninsula as well as on Nunivak Island. The competition to get the limited drawing tags is pretty thick and those drawn must pay $500 if they are an Alaska resident. The cost jumps to $1,100 for nonresidents and $1,500 for nonresidents who are not United States citizens.

According to Gorn, the Department of Fish and Game receives nearly 1,700 applications a year for the drawing hunts while 200 will register for the subsistence hunts. There is no cost for the subsistence hunt tags which are only available to Alaska residents. It's unclear what would stop a trophy hunter from participating in the subsistence hunt if the trophy destruction requirement were removed. "This trophy destruction, it removes a pool of people. It's a driving factor for them to hunt this animal because they want a trophy," Gorn said. "We certainly don't get 1,700 people a year getting registration permits."

Gorn is uncertain how regulations could be altered to safeguard the subsistence nature of the hunt if the option of trophy destruction is taken away. "If we don't find a clear alternative, there could be biological consequences," Gorn said.

That's not to say the issue has not been considered. "The reality here is, to some degree, we've all been thinking about this for 10 years," Gorn said. The biologist noted that a musk ox cooperators group that represents different entities and communities in the region has mulled the issue for years. "The cooperators have been terribly successful on reaching consensus on lots of different issues, but never with trophy destruction," he said.

While the musk ox population on the peninsula has grown from 36 in 1970 to a current estimate of 3,120, Gorn said there have been a few troubling trends within the population. He said the mature bull-to-cow ratio in the unit closest to Nome has dropped in recent years. He also noted fewer yearlings in several units in what biologists describe as lower recruitment. "If we were talking about a moose population now, the definite action would be to reduce harvest rates, maybe reduce seasons," he said.

How to comment

Comments on the trophy destruction proposal or any of the other proposals before the board can be mailed to Board of Game's support staff in Juneau or delivered in person at the Wasilla meeting. Mailed comments must be received two weeks in advance of the meeting to be included in the board's workbook. Written comments received after the two-week cutoff will be given to the board at the beginning of the meeting.

Comments should include the proposal number which is being addressed. Trophy destruction is being considered in Proposal 223. Other proposals affecting the region include Proposal 208 calling for the reauthorization of antlerless moose hunts in Unit 22C, the area surrounding Nome, and Unit 22D Remainder. Proposal 206 would reauthorize the current resident tag fee exemptions for brown bear hunts in Unit 22 as well as Units 18, 23 and 26A.

A digital copy of all the proposals to be considered at the March 4-10 meeting in Wasilla as well as a March 26-30 meeting in Anchorage can be downloaded from the website www.boards.adfg.state.ak.us and following the links to the Board of Game page where you will be able to find links to the proposal book for the Central/Southwest and Southcentral regions. The first pages of the proposal book give detailed information on how to comment.

City pitches plan to spare White Alice

By Sandra L. Medearis

Friends of White Alice antennas who do not want to see the Cold War souvenirs torn down will be glad to know that a solution may be in the works.

The City of Nome has presented a landuse agreement to Sitnasuak Native Corp., potential owners of the mammoth antennas on Anvil Mountain. Sitnasuak will consider the conditions of the proposed agreement at their next land committee meeting.

Sitnasuak is in line to receive land from the U.S. Air Force at the top of the mountain, but cannot take possession until the Bureau of Land Management signs off on the transfer. Before that can happen the site must be cleared of contaminants to meet satisfaction of the federal Bureau of Land Management, the clearinghouse for Alaska Native land claims. Air Force subcontractors last summer began clearing contaminants known as PCBs from the soil. However, the back panels of the towers are contaminated by Glassbestos, a type of insulation combining glass and asbestos, according to an analysis conducted by the Air Force.

City Manager Josie Bahnke refused to provide the Nugget the contents of the proposed agreement that would involve public resources. However, the issue came up briefly

Slow pace of hiring buoys school budget

By Tyler Rhodes

Largely due to late hires and open positions, Nome's school district is currently running under budget for the year.

The Nome Board of Education received an update on the district's finances from business manager Cathi Wojtanek at its Jan. 25 work session. Wojtanek reported that a total of more than $353,000 was knocked off the budgeted expenditures for the year due to salaries and benefits not paid to teacher and other staff positions that remain open or were not filled until after the year started.

Those savings contrast with more than $260,500 in expenditures that were not anticipated when the budget was initially drafted. The increase was largely driven by equipment and supply purchases, such as new furniture for the elementary school ($53,000), a new computer system to handle the district's finances ($46,000) and a new vehicle ($20,000). Another $50,740 was set aside to fund major maintenance projects for next year, specifically those that need to be completed during the summer months.

It is normal practice for the school budget

Harrelson stays NSEDC chairman, Ivanoff named president

corporate officers on Jan. 28, the final day of their fourth quarter meeting in Nome.

Dan Harrelson of White Mountain, who had served as NSEDC's board chairman and president since October 2006, announced on Jan. 27 that he would not run for president of the corporation in this year's election. He voiced support for vice president and chief executive officer Janis Ivanoff for the presidency. The next day the board re-elected Harrelson as board chairman and elected Ivanoff as president.

In addition to the board chair, the executive committee consists of a vice chairman, sergeant at arms and two other board members. Harrelson bested challenger William (Middy) Johnson by a 9-6 vote for board chairman. Johnson then edged out Don Stiles of Nome for vice chairman in an 8-7 vote. Stiles outpolled Oscar Takak of Elim by a vote of 9 to 6 for sergeant at arms.

Eugene Asicksik of Shaktoolik won a three-way race for one of two directors' seats on the executive committee, receiving 7 votes compared to 5 for Takak and 3 for Dean Peterson of Golovin. Takak took the remaining director's seat with 6 votes, edging out Peterson who drew 5 votes and Wilfred Katcheak of Stebbins who received 4 votes.

The NSEDC board annually elects the company's president, vice president, treasurer and secretary.

Stiles nominated Ivanoff for president and moved for unanimous consent. Joe Garnie of Teller was the only board member who said "No." Johnson noted that the floor must remain open for other nominations if there is not unanimous consent.

Harrelson asked if there are any other nominations. Garnie nominated Askicksik for president. Ivanoff received 10 votes compared to 5 for Asicksik. Johnson then nominated NSEDC chief operating officer Simon Kinneen for the office of vice president, and Garnie nominated Asicksik. Kinneen won the post by a vote of 8 to 7. The board voted by unanimous consent to reelect controller Rick Walicki as treasurer and to re-elect education, employment and training coordinator Jerry Ivanoff as treasurer.

Ad hoc committee formed

Harrelson said he has received a request to form a new board committee and allow board members who sit on it to attend meetings of the North Pacific Fishery Management Council and report back to the full board.

Noting that council meetings may last 10 days, Harrelson said board members should save the corporation money by limiting their attendance to three to four days and focusing on agenda topics NSEDC deals with. A council meeting began Jan. 31 in Seattle and is scheduled to run

Dear editor:

I am writing this letter to you as a personal response to your editorial regarding Governor Parnell's upcoming visit published on January 20, 2011. My name is Katie O'Connor, the "artistic" face painter who painted "beautiful art" onto the faces of the children in our community as described by your staff in The Nome Nugget published on November 25,

In your editorial, you stated that Nomeites like to "dress up or down and dance to good music" along with your negative opinion about the currently planned family style event at the Rec. Center. You mentioned "face painting" repeatedly as if it's an event planned around just face painting. As someone who represents

The Nome Nugget (who thought highly enough of face painting to publish it in previous papers), you are quick to share your poor opinion of the art.

You failed to mention that Governor Parnell's preference was not to have a fancy gala or Inaugural Ball. Instead, he requested to experience our community's culture and requested the engagement of youth. I believe, by wanting an event involving families and children, that Governor Parnell wanted to see the people of Nome in a natural state and quite frankly, at its finest. After all, our youth is our future.

It has become apparent that maybe you didn't have enough information on his visit or know that he is leaving on Alaska Airlines flight 153 the very same day he arrives. His travel plans simply do not accommodate the idea of an evening gala.

Nome is not Anchorage, Juneau or Fairbanks. Nome is a rural community that embraces the traditional culture and is built on family values. What better way to show Governor Parnell the true beauty of Nome other than a family style event with locals and their families? I look forward to this event, meeting the governor and painting the faces of Nome's youth.

Sincerely, Katie O'Connor Local artist/photographer

Dear Editor,

I was fascinated by the quick response by a group of volunteers, the Search and Rescue from Brevig Mission, that went out looking for my nephew Swenson (Sweeney) Tocktoo.

On behalf of our family, I am writing to say thanks to all the volunteers the Search and Rescue teams from Brevig Mission, Teller, Shishmaref, and Nome, who all went out for two nights and three days until my nephew was found.

Also, to extend my appreciation to all the surrounding villages and all the people in Anchorage for their thoughts and prayers.

To all those people that went to my folks' house to pray and sing for the longest two nights of their lives, especially those who stayed with my folks on those long nights, thank you all and God bless each and every one

To add on, my condolences and prayers go out to Kenny Lee's fam-

In a young state of only 52+years, with a growing populace spread over 365,000,000 acres, Native Americans (Alaska Natives) and First Nations Indians who also reside in this great state, all are at greater risk than previously thought. Why, one may ask. What change is occurring?

Reality of Unreality

Sometimes one wonders how our society would be perceived if an observer from a galaxy far, far away would read our email. How would they interpret the fact that at least 90 percent of our communication is about erectile dysfunction? What would they make of our television programs about so called reality and brain dead stories about fat people and the antics and seedy personal lives of movie stars folks don't know or want to know?

How long can the ordinary citizen put up with such drivel? It's as if the entertainment industry and the worlds of politics and communication are conspiring to dumb us down. An Alaskan politician recently went on a rant about the need to be nice to the oil companies because they might just pick up and leave Alaska. Are we shaking in our bunny boots or doubled up with laughter? Think about it. Where is the oil? It's not in Shell oil's suitcase. Are we afraid to take charge of our own resources? Are we being bullied?

Where is common sense? We have a Congress that is attacking Health Care like a bunch of flying monkeys intent on pointless destruction and wasting time. Of course, not to be outdone, the Nome School Board has pulled the rug out from under the superintendent. We're not sure why. We must not be smart enough to figure it out. It can't be a micromanagement problem because the board never communicated their displeasure with him. One would hope the board would have learned to get their concerns out in the open instead of hiding in an executive session. The public wants and deserves open and transparent government. We want the truth. We don't want charades, show business, hidden agendas, false tears or phony rhetoric. We want intelligence and honesty. - N.L.M.-

The Nugget proudly holds the title of "Alaska's Oldest Newspaper"! However, J.F.A. Strong did not keep his title as governor. It was discovered that he was not a U.S. citizen so he was removed from office!

Florida judge finds health care reform unconstitutional

AP—A federal judge declared the Obama administration's health care overhaul unconstitutional Monday. siding with 26 states that argued people cannot be required to buy health insurance. U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson agreed with the states that the new law violates people's rights by forcing them to buy health insurance by 2014 or face penalties. He went a step further than a previous ruling against the law, declaring the entire thing unconstitutional if the insurance requirement does not hold up. Attornevs for the administration had argued that the states did not have standing to challenge the law and that the case should be dismissed. Justice Department spokeswoman Tracy Schmaler said Monday the department strongly disagrees with Vinson's ruling and intends to appeal.

Florida's former Republican attorney general Bill McCollum filed the lawsuit just minutes after President Barack Obama signed the 10-year, $938 billion health care bill into law in March. He chose a court in Pensacola, one of Florida's most conservative cities. The nation's most influential small business lobby, the National Federation of Independent Business, also joined. Officials in the states that sued lauded Vinson's decision. Almost all of them have Republican governors, attorneys general or both. Alaska is among the 26 states that joined in the law suit. Senator Lisa Murkowski said that the ruling "confirms what many of us have been saying about the constitutionality of the individual mandate in the law. "Clearly this is not the final word on the matter, and ultimately the U.S. Supreme Court will be the final arbitrator," she said.

Alaska state Senator Hollis French (D-Anchorage) introduced legislation that would establish a new, competitive health insurance marketplace in Alaska. Senate Bill 70 would create the Alaska Health Benefit Exchange. which focuses on connecting individuals and small businesses in Alaska with affordable health coverage through tax credits and medical assistance programs. It aims to set up a level playing field where insurers will have to compete for customers.

Oil and gas tax revamp front and center in Juneau

Governor Sean Parnell proposed to revamp the oil and gas tax structure and give resource developers even more tax credits than already provided. Between summer of 2007 and December 2009, Alaska granted tax credits in the amount of $1.3 billion to oil and gas companies. A legislative hearing in February has been scheduled to inform legislators how the tax credits work. Credits are seen as a way to encourage investment; in Alaska, they're offered in areas including oil and gas, film production and education.

While the governor has proposed his oil tax overhaul, Senator Lesil McGuire last week introduced a resolution calling for a competitive review of Alaska's fiscal and regulatory system for oil and gas production. The resolution would establish the Alaska Oil and Gas Competitiveness Review Task Force within the legislative branch and charge the panel with reviewing the competitive position of the state to attract and maintain investment in the oil and gas sector and the factors that might affect investment.

Begich introduces Arctic oil spill bills

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich has introduced three bills to push oil and natural gas development in the Arctic. Begich's bills would initiate Arctic oil spill research by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, the US Coast Guard and other federal agencies to conduct research to improve oil spill prevention, response, and recovery in the Arctic. Begich proposes to increase the per barrel contribution to the oil spill liability trust fund by 3 cents a barrel. The raise would pan out to $300 million. The bills also require transport of oil ashore via pipelines. A separate bill would give Alaska revenue sharing from offshore development, a provision currently given to states in the Gulf of Mexico. Different versions of these three bills have been in the previous

Group seeks records in Rep. Young investigation

AP— A Washington, D.C., watchdog group is asking the Justice Department to release its files in the corruption investigation of U.S. Rep. Don Young of Alaska. Melanie Sloan, executive director of the Citizens for Responsibility and Ethics in Washington, told the Anchorage Daily News it will go to court if, as expected, the department claims the records are exempt under the Freedom of Information Act. The group says it wants to know why the department dropped its investigation of Young without filing charges.

Young had been under investigation since 2006 over allegations he accepted illegal campaign contributions. Young announced in August that the Justice Department had told his lawyers it had decided against indicting him. After getting convictions of three Alaska state lawmakers, a lobbyist and several businessmen, the investigation collapsed under allegations of prosecutorial misconduct in the 2008 trial of U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska. Young was under investigation for an earmark in a Florida transportation bill for an interchange sought by a developer who provided him campaign money.

Alaska has permanent regional BIA director

Bureau of Indian Affairs director Michael Black named Eugene Virden as the regional director of the BIA's Alaska regional office in Juneau. Virden has been serving as the acting regional director since 2001. Of the 12 BIA regional offices in the country, Alaska's was the only office without a permanent director in place. At the Alaska Federation of Natives Legislative Committee's request, Congressman Don Young contacted Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar, and asked that a permanent regional director be put into office.

through Feb. 8.

Harrelson appointed Victor Joe of St. Michael, Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk, Frank Oxereok of Wales and Takak to the board's new ad hoc committee. He said NSEDC will bring all board members to the council meeting scheduled to begin June 6 in Nome.

Johnson asked whether any other board members want to go to council meetings. Asicksik said he is interested in attending. Johnson suggested expanding the ad hoc committee to five or six members. "Four is a good number," Stiles said. Harrelson said if critical issues arise, the board can revisit the topic.

NSEDC's practice of sending board members to council meetings originated at a board meeting in late April 2009 in Unalakleet. The council had taken oral and written testimony earlier that month at an Anchorage meeting on alternatives for a management plan to reduce Chinook (king) salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery.

The council decided to provide two options for the pollock sectors: (1) to fish under an annual hard cap of 47,591 Chinook to be divided by season and sector, or (2) to participate in a private-sector bycatch reduction incentive plan agreement which, if approved by the National Marine Fisheries Service, would be subject to a higher hard cap of 60,000 fish. Hope was expressed that incentives for reducing bycatch eventually will result in bycatch levels below 60,000 or even below 47,591. A Chinook bycatch management plan for the Bering Sea pollock fishery based on the council's action took effect last month when the 2011 fishery opened.

Prior to the April 2009 council meeting, the NSEDC board had voted unanimously in favor of an alternative for a simple bycatch hard cap of 47,591 Chinook salmon. "Was that brought to the council?" asked Garnie at NSEDC's April 2009 meeting in Unalakleet.

Charlie Lean, director of Fisheries Research and Development for NSEDC, said he had talked with Harrelson and Kinneen, who is a member of the council's advisory panel, before presenting testimony to the council on behalf of NSEDC. Lean said big changes had come down, so he had testified adamantly for a 47,591 performance standard. "A 47,591 hard cap in my opinion is less effective than a 47,591 performance standard," he added. Lean's testimony supported the option for a private-sector incentive plan agreement that includes a higher bycatch hard cap of 60,000 Chinook salmon.

"I feel we need a special panel, a bycatch committee of the board, to be able to bring forward the board's plans on bycatch, to observe at [council] meetings and report back to the board," Garney said. He said he thinks board members should attend council meetings to observe firsthand the concerns of others in the state about bycatch issues. A majority of board members subsequently attended at least one council meeting, and some have become regular attendees.

Currently the council is developing a management plan to reduce chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. Garnie has asked what NSEDC is doing to develop a position on chum salmon bycatch at each of the past several board meetings.

He has pointed out that king salmon are virtually extinct in the Teller area, red salmon runs are severely diminished, the only strong salmon run left is chum, and people in the Teller area depend on it for subsistence. He also has noted that fishers from Nome harvest chum in the Teller area. Garnie has consistently advocated for an annual chum bycatch hardcap of 30,000 fish in the Bering Sea pollock fishery.

Last week at the NSEDC board meeting in Nome, Janis Ivanoff said the board will discuss salmon bycatch issues at a special meeting in March. Kinneen and Lean commented on a preliminary draft environmental analysis of Bering Sea non-Chinook salmon bycatch management that recently was posted on the council's website and will be discussed by the council this week in Seattle. They noted that the document contains information gaps called "placeholders." For example, the analysis includes placeholders for the executive summary, for part of the section on chum salmon biology and distribution, for the impacts on chum salmon and for considerations of future actions.

Garnie asked whether staff members are going to this week's council meeting in Seattle to come up with chum salmon bycatch numbers. Kinneen said their purpose is to tell the council they need a good explanation of alternatives so they can explain them to the NSEDC board at its meeting in March. Among management alternatives listed in the environmental analysis are triggered closures and annual chum bycatch hard caps ranging from 50,000 to 353,000 fish.

Council staff members will present information on chum salmon bycatch management alternatives and other issues as part of a panel discussion of Bering Sea issues on the morning of Feb. 23 at the Nome Recreation Center, reports Nicole Kimball, staff for the council's rural community outreach committee. In an e-mail to The Nome Nugget, she said council staff will be at a table to answer questions for the rest of the day. The panel discussion is part of the Bering Strait Regional Conference scheduled Feb. 22-24.

The council had planned to hold community outreach meetings in eight western Alaska communities including Nome between December 2010 and mid-May 2011 with two council members in attendance at each meeting. However, Kimball said she initially thought the Bering Strait Regional Conference would be held in April, so she scheduled a community outreach meeting with the Yukon-Kuskokwim Rural Advisory Council Feb. 23-24 in Mountain Village. The conflict in meeting dates means that no council member will be able to attend the Nome session, she explained.

Kimball said she wouldn't call the Nome session on Feb. 23 a separate meeting. "It is mainly to let people know what will be on the agenda for the upcoming June council meeting in Nome," she said. "I don't expect this to take the place of an outreach meeting like we had last time, but we will have ample time on the agenda for direct feedback to all council members in June, so I am counting on that."

In 2009 the council held a community outreach meeting in Nome to discuss bycatch management alternatives for Chinook salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. Representatives of Bering Strait tribes, NSEDC board members, pollock industry representatives and others asked questions and made comments in person and by teleconference for hours during the packed meeting at the Nome Eskimo Community conference room.

City, Lions Club sweeten Iron Dog pot

By Tyler Rhodes

The richest Iron Dog in history keeps getting more lucrative as the City of Nome and the Bering Sea Lions Club have chipped in even more prize money.

Billing itself as the world's longest, toughest snowmobile race, the Iron Dog is a 2,000-mile race that has teams of two riding from Big Lake to Nome and then from Nome to Fairbanks.

The Nome Common Council voted Jan. 24 to boost the prize money by $5,000, splitting the payout by giving $3,000 to the second-place finisher and $2,000 to third place. The Bering Sea Lions Club will give $3,000 to the team who clocks the fastest time between White Mountain and Nome. "Nome has been a longtime supporter of the Iron Dog and this level of support demonstrates the warm reception our racers, families and fans have come to enjoy each year," Iron Dog Executive Director Kevin Kastner said in a press release.

The new donations push the total race purse above the $200,000 mark at $202,500. Another $10,000 of that prize has ties to Nome with the offering this year of the Gold Rush Prize for the first team to reach the halfway point in Nome. That $10,000 prize is offered by Donlin Creek, a mining firm that includes NovaGold, which owns sizeable land and mining interests in and around Nome.

The Iron Dog pro class teams are scheduled to fire off the starting line at Big Lake on Feb. 20. Teams are expected to arrive in Nome starting around Tuesday afternoon, Feb. 22. Nome will host its traditional halfway banquet Feb. 23 at the National Guard Armory. A start time for the banquet has yet to be finalized. The event is free to the public.

NSEDC reports preliminary profits of $9.4 million for 2010

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. posted a $9.4 million net gain in assets last year, according to preliminary figures presented to the board of directors at their meeting last week in Nome.

Controller Rick Walicki cautioned that his financial report is based on information available Dec. 31, 2010, and figures will change as the company continues to accrue income and expenses for last year. Following is a summary of Walicki's report.

NSEDC's net assets grew from $135.3 million on Dec. 31, 2009 to $144.7 million at the end of last year. Both figures include non-controlling interests in NSEDC. The value of NSEDC's investment portfolio totaled $71 million at the end of 2010, a gain of $4.7 million for the year. Walicki said portfolio investments actually yielded an additional $2 million in revenues, but those profits were transferred to company operations in August from the portfolio managed by Charles Schwab.

The company's investments in long-term assets totaled $10.5 million in 2009 and $17.3 million in 2010, Walicki reported. He said Siu Alaska Corp., NSEDC's wholly owned, forprofit subsidiary purchased Glacier Fish Company's 50 percent interest in the Glacier Bay's Limited License Program fishing rights in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands Pacific cod fishery for $6.8 million in July. Siu now owns 100 percent of the Glacier Bay's LLP cod fishing rights.

Last summer Siu also invested $1.4 million in Dutch Harbor Acquisitions LLC, Walicki noted. He said Siu bought the remaining 50 percent of Glacier Bay Fisheries on Dec. 22. Siu is now the sole owner of the company. NSEDC invested $450,000 in Pilgrim Hot Springs last year, he added.

NSEDC's cash assets dropped from $10.2 million at the end of 2009 to $6.8 million on Dec. 31, 2010, a decrease of about $3.6 million, Walicki reported.

at the last Nome Common Council meeting. Sitnasuak has sought relief from assuming the whole responsibility of the costs of abatement and maintenance. Otherwise, the towers would have to be demolished before the land could be transferred.

Possible demise of the antennas, remnants of the statewide communications system that served as an early alert system and boosted long-distance communication in remote Alaska communities, has roused concern from history buffs as well as winter travelers who use the antennas as landmarks for finding their way home. Nome Search and Rescue as well as the local citizens' radio group, SPARC, use the tower site in their communication network.

The four 60-foot, 100-ton White Alice towers have stood on Anvil Mountain since their completion in 1958. The curved antennas once belonged to a chain of quadruple sets that stretched across remote mountains and flatlands to carry military and civilian messages even before Alaska became a state. Before then, people in remote areas had to make appointments to use the phone.

People from Nome and Lower 48 who treasure relics of history want to see White Alice survive.

Tearing down monuments is not a good idea, said Laura Samuelson, director of Nome's Carrie M McLain Memorial Museum. "We should appreciate and remember the efforts of those who built this town and this state," she said.

The White Alice system of 33 stations at intervals of up to 200 miles covered 3,100 miles of routes during the Cold War. The telecommunications system was a part of Alaska's defense industry valued at $300 million annually in the late 1950s and early 1960s, according to documents published by telecommunications industry.

Current liabilities

Walicki pegged NSEDC's total liabilities and assets at $164.7 million on Dec. 31, 2010. That figure includes $20 million in liabilities, up from $6.3 million at the end of 2009. The liabilities include a line of credit for $6.5 million, primarily for NSEDC's bulk fuel loan program. Walicki said the company made a $1 million payment on the loan in January, so the current balance is $5 million. The company uses payments from participants on their interest-free bulk fuel loans to repay the line of credit.

Board member Joe Garnie of Teller asked Walicki to explain what a line of credit is. It's a short-term loan that in NSEDC's case is renewable for one year, Walicki replied. He said the interest rate is 1.4 percent, the loan enables the company to accomplish the program, and he expects that the line of credit will be paid in full in April or May.

Board Chairman Dan Harrelson of White Mountain told Garnie that NSEDC will purchase less fuel in 2011 because the biggest participant in last year's program (Nome's Bonanza Fuel) has decided not to participate.

Other liabilities at the end of last year included an $8.45 million line of credit for Siu Alaska Corp., Walicki reported.

Harvest revenues increase

NSEDC receives allocations of the total allowable catch of pollock, crab, halibut and other fish species in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands area as one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program. The company also owns Individual Fishing Quotas for various species. NSEDC's harvest revenues from CDQ and IFQ species combined totaled $14.3 million in 2010, an increase of about $1 million over 2009, Walicki reported. He said harvest revenues from CDQ species alone totaled $12.3 million last year.

Fishing and fish processing revenues increased by $800,000 in 2010 due to good prices received by NSEDC's Norton Sound Seafood Products, Walicki noted. He said the Aleutian No. 1 had expenses of just under $1 million last year, but crab revenues were up by $2 million. The company received equity earnings of $3.9 million from Glacier Fish Co., he added. Walicki said NSEDC's revenues totaled $35.2 million in 2010.

Siu Alaska news

The Bering Star Fisheries processing plant at Dutch Harbor took its first delivery of 35,000 pounds of cod on Jan. 16, Siu Alaska President John Eckels told the NSEDC board. Last summer Siu and Western Alaska Ventures LLC formed Dutch Harbor Acquisitions LLC to acquire the assets of Harbor Crown Seafoods, a small, idle fish plant. The plant was built in 2005 and came with modern processing and freezing equipment.

Eckels said Coastal Villages Region Fund delivered 191,000 pounds of opilio crab to Bering Star Fisheries on Jan. 21 and plans to make several more deliveries. The plant is operated by Copper River Seafoods, which owns 60 percent of Western Alaska Ventures.

Clipper Seafoods has begun to harvest Pacific cod under a management agreement with Siu, Eckels reported. He said the Glacier Bay is the only asset of Glacier Bay Fisheries, which is wholly owned by Siu.

Eckels announced that Siu will join another CDQ group in a pollock and crab venture, forming the first investment partnership between two CDQs. He said he had hoped to provide details about the investment during the board meeting, but the paperwork will not be signed until this week.

A special Siu shareholders meeting was held Jan. 28 to elect a candidate for an NSEDC-affiliated seat on the Siu board of directors. The meeting was closed to the public and took place just prior to adjournment of the NSEDC board meeting. Immediately after the Siu meeting, Eckels told The Nome Nugget that Eugene Asicksik, a newly elected NSEDC board member from Shaktoolik, had won the Siu board seat. Eckels said he could not recall the vote count, and he seemed to be in a hurry.

The Nugget sent an e-mail to Eckels requesting that he provide the names of all candidates for the Siu board seat and the number of votes each of them received. Eckels has not responded.

Asicksik is a former president and chief executive officer of NSEDC. On Jan. 11 he won a runoff election for the Shaktoolik board seat against the incumbent Harvey Sookiayak by a vote of 55 to 49. Asicksik also won a runoff election for Seat C on the Shaktoolik City Council on Jan. 25, defeating Myron Savetilik by a vote of 56 to 26. During the "board comments" section of the NSEDC meeting, Asicksik thanked those who had prayed for him and the young voters.

NSEDC adds new staff

Unalakleet resident Reese Huhta will replace William (Middy) Johnson as manager of NSEDC's Southern Norton Sound Seafood Products plant, reports Janis Ivanoff, president and chief executive officer. Ivanoff also said Tyler Rhodes, formerly a reporter and photographer for The Nome Nugget, will assume the newly created position of communications director.

School administrators report progress on strategic plan

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Board of Education received a rapid-fire update on the school district's progress in meeting the goals set forth in its five-year strategic plan Jan. 25.

The update came at a work session in the Nome Elementary School library where the board members were presented with written reports from members of the district's administrative team. Since the board did not receive the reports in advance of the meeting, they largely withheld comments and questions until their next work session scheduled for Feb. 22.

The reports were divvied up into five sections, each representing a goal outlined in the strategic plan. The first section covered student learning and was reported on by the two principals in the district, Steve Gast from Nome-Beltz and the elementary school's Dave Keller. Both principals noted their surprise at how much had been accomplished after going through the exercise of preparing the report. "I was pleasantly surprised at our progress," Keller said. "It turned out to be a real positive exercise," Gast said, noting he had solicited edits from the teachers on the rough draft of his report. Gast said the feedback he received helped him realize more had been accomplished than he originally thought.

The principals' reports noted achievements in providing culturally relevant education through activities such as butchering a moose, fishing trips, guest speaker and elder visits, Eskimo drum and dance performances, raising salmon in elementary classrooms, and the display of banners listing Inupiaq values at both campuses. The report on the elementary school also included benchmarks made in the areas of early detection of at-risk students, curriculum development and hands-on learning, and proficiency on state tests.

The high school report also touched on the introduction of online classes for credit recovery for those who have fallen behind and advanced courses for students who are ahead. The report noted partnering efforts with outside organizations, the offering of clubs and hands-on learning such as a three-day junior high camp.

Jon Berkeley, the district's director of federal programs, instruction and accountability, reported on the strategic plan's second goal concerning stakeholder satisfaction. Among other items, Berkeley outlined steps to arrange joint meetings between the Parent Teacher Student Association and the Parent Advisory Committee; celebrate school success in the media; increase the number of dual-credit courses offered for students at the Northwest Campus; increase participation in school programs by local agencies, organizations and tribal entities; and to provide outreach to parents of children who are younger than five years old.

Janeen Sullivan, the district's coordinator of curriculum and assessment, handed out a report on how the district is progressing on its third goal addressing work force development. Sullivan's report touched several times on a group who travelled to Washington state to observe what made a dramatic turnaround in its reading scores. The report also noted progress on developing professional development plans for teachers; various trainings conducted; the development of classes offered to teachers through Alaska's university system; and the inclusion of the district's Native education coordinator in developing curriculum resources.

The fourth goal covered support systems for the district and was reported on by Robin Johnson, the district's technology director. In relation to a directive to maintain state-of-the-art technology, Johnson son pointed to the acquisition of more interactive, digital whiteboards and the training of teachers to use them. She also noted the addition of touch screen technology for special education students. In terms of school safety, Johnson noted the reorganization of the elementary school parking lot to improve the flow of vehicles and pedestrians. Regarding communication with parents, Johnson wrote that a survey would soon be launched.

Superintendent Jon Wehde delivered the final report, covering goals such as securing additional funding, the pursuit of asset sharing, developing energy efficient facilities, strengthening advocacy and increasing student enrollment. Wehde said he has been working on two different grants for the district, one titled Safe Routes that addresses getting students to school safely. The second grant would cover security at schools. Wehde also noted that he has been approaching local and regional businesses in regard to using tax credits to support vocational programs within the schools, specifically the Junior Reserve Officers Training Program, or JROTC.

The school board will discuss the reports and the progress on the strategic plan at its Feb. 22 meeting which starts at 5:30 p.m.

School budget

to be revised throughout the year. One reason for the fluid nature of the balance sheets is that the district cannot be certain of its funding from the state until after a student count is performed in October. The district is still awaiting the state's final determination of that count on which it bases its contribution to Nome.

Nome Public Schools has penciled in a count of 670 students, reflecting an increase of 13 students over its initial count estimate. That projected increase has the district assuming it will receive nearly $12,400 more in state funding than it had initially planned. In total, the district expects to receive nearly $7.7 million from the state. The anticipated increase in state funding was offset by a $5,000 decrease in funds coming to the district from Medicaid.

Overall, Wojtanek reported that expenditures are projected to come in $92,609 under what was initially anticipated while revenues are currently thought to be $7,391 above the previous budget. The combined effect of the revenue and expenditure adjustments is an additional $100,000 in the budget.

If these budget predictions hold true to the end of the year, the district's administration has proposed rolling that $100,000 out of the general fund and into a budget for capital projects. First up in line for the dollars in the capital projects budget is the upgrade of the sprinkler and fire alarm system in the building that houses the district offices and the Anvil City Science Academy charter school. For the past several years the district has forward-funded large capital projects and successfully sought reimbursement from the state.

The Jan. 25 report spurred only a few comments and questions from the board members. Board member Barb Nickels noted that expanding the budget for expenditures has become a routine practice. "This year and last year we have been going over [the budget] in supplies and materials," she said. "I think we need to take that into consideration with this year's budget. Maybe we should up what we're budgeting if we keep going over by $100,000."

Nickels also commented on the savings realized through understaffing. "I know we save a lot of money there, but are we doing all we can to fill those vacancies?" she asked.

The board will be asked to approve the budget revision at its Feb. 8 regular meeting.

Budget, superintendent spurs public comment

Addressing the board during the public comment portion of the Jan. 25 meeting, Ruth Weiss asked that the board consider funding more aide positions at the elementary school as it starts the process of drafting next vear's budget. Weiss, who is a former Nome Public Schools employee and has worked as a substitute teacher said she has seen firsthand the impact an aide can have on the classroom. She also noted the role aides could play in providing small group instruction if the district adopts an aggressive program to have at least 90 percent of all its third graders reading at their grade level or higher. "Please make hiring more aides a priority in you plans," she said.

Weiss also advocated for the hiring of a counselor/mentor at the junior high. "They need someone to go to for so many things," she said of the junior high students. "Please put the needs of the students first when making this year's budget decisions."

Weiss also took the opportunity to express her displeasure over the decision by superintendent Jon Wehde to decline the board's offer of a oneyear contract extension for next year. "I am very disappointed that we are again switching superintendents," she said. "I was hoping we were going to be heading forward with this board."

Weiss' comments came on the heels of Matt Tomter's address to the board in which he framed his frustration over the board's handling of the superintendent contract in financial terms. "It's irresponsible fiscally," he said. "First of all it's going to cost $20,000 to $30,000 to get a new guy in and set him up," Tomter said.

Tomter said it was especially disappointing to lose a key employee who was already living in Nome when he was brought into the position. Tomter took offense that the district looks to the local business community to fund certain programs while making what he saw as financially irresponsible decisions. "I'd ask you to consider your decision...and beg Mr. Wehde to stay," he said. "The financial capabilities of this school district don't allow you to spend money the way you do."

At the end of the Jan. 25 meeting, board president Gloria Karmun addressed the topic of the superintendent, informing her fellow board members that the Nome Common Council had requested a meeting with the school board on Feb. 3 at 6 p.m. "The topic is the superintendent and possible guidance or direction," she said.

Karmun said the meeting was to be held in either a work session or closed executive session. Board member Marie Tozier said she would not be able to attend due to a class she is taking. Barb Amarok said she would not be available until 6:40 p.m. due to a class she is teaching.

Reading goal gains steam

As principal of the elementary school, Dave Keller normally addresses the school board at moments reserved for district personnel. On Jan. 25, Keller took the podium during the time reserved for public comments to ask the board to adopt a goal being brought forward by a group of teachers and administrators. "We would like to reach a goal of 90 percent of our third grade students reading at or above reading level in three years," Keller said.

The ambitious goal was picked up from the school district in Kennewick, Wash., who hosted the Nome delegation for a number of days last fall. While visiting, the Nome team of administrators and teachers was able to observe and question their Washington peers on how they reached the same goal. The group has since reported to the board on their findings and have met to start planning on how Nome could achieve similar success. There has been much back-and-forth between the board and teachers on who should shepherd the program forward.

Keller's presentation signals that the group is ready to move ahead with the support of the board. "We are prepared to urge the board to accept the 90 percent goal," Keller said. To prove his point, he unfurled a large banner with the signatures of the educators who travelled to Kennewick, noting that he wanted the board members to add their names. Keller also asked that the board approve a resolution at its next meeting to officially express its support of the goal.

She made State the last two years in a row for the Nanook Wrestling Team, which is co-ed a first for Nome. Her brother Lonny currently has 22 wins and 8 losses at the NJCAA level. He's attending Ridgewater College in Willmar, Minnesota. She is the daughter of David and Rena Booshu of Nome. They are proud parents of wrestling children.

Hospital at Ft. Leonard Wood, MO. Her parents are Andy and Heidi Lean. Her paternal grandparents are Mikey and Charlie Lean of Nome. Her maternal grandparents are Jerry and Mandy-Jo Hartley of Talkeetna.

Honors
The Office of the Chancellor, University of Alaska Anchorage congratulated Torvald Thomas of Nome for his excellent academic performance at UAA last semester! During fall 2010, he was enrolled in at least 12 credits and earned a GPAA of 4.00—which qualified him for the Chancellor's list.

The level of dedication required to achieve a 4.0 is great, and they applauded him for the focus and determination he brought to his studies. These are qualities which will serve Torvald well in his future endeavors.

Jonrowe wins Tustumena 200

DeeDee Jonrowe won last weekend's Tustumena 200 sled dog race, starting in Kasilof. Jonrowe finished the 200-mile race in a race time, not counting eight hours of rest, of 19 hours and seven minutes. Jonrowe beat Willow musher Cim Smyth to the finishline by eight minutes. Mike Santos, Colleen Robertia and Gary van Loo rounded out the top five of 13 mushers. Last week's Kusko 300 winner Paul Gebhard won the Tustumena 100 race in nine hours and 53 minutes of running time.

Up River, Scammon Bay win Shootout

After three straight days of nearly nonstop basketball action at Nome-Beltz, the Scammon Bay boys and a cooperative team of girls from Shungnak, Ambler and Kobuk were able to walk away with trophies as the champions of the 2011 Norton Sound Shootout.

Runner up honors went to Brevig Mission on the boys side and the Scammon Bay girls in the tournament that featured four girls squads and six boys teams. The games started Jan. 27 with what could be deemed exhibition games by the Nome boys and girls varsity teams against the Shishmaref boys and Scammon Bay girls. The results of those games, handily won by the Nome teams, did not count toward the tournament rankings. Nome's junior varsity teams represented the Nanooks in the tourney.

Nome's JV boys nabbed fourth place and the JV girls were able to come away with one win out of their three games played. Nome's Ariana Horner was named the tournament's most valuable player for the girls. That honor on the boys' side went to Petey Lockwood of St. Michael. Nome's Tyler Eide was also named to the all-tournament team.

Ask a doctor: More questions from second graders

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Here is another collection of answers to medical questions posed in letters written to the doctor by Mr. Slingsby's second grade class. A few of the letters, including the answers, are published here with permission from the students' parents. I think you will find the topics are relevant no matter what your age.

Dear Dr. Bob.

I sometimes wet my bed and I am 7. It is embarrassing and I don't like What should I do? (Student wished to remain anonymous).

Thank you for being brave and asking a tough question about bedwetting. Though many people are embarrassed to talk about it, the problem of bed-wetting is actually very common. In fact, two or three students in every second grade class in the United States occasionally wet the bed. Doctors call the problem "nocturnal enuresis." It has many possible causes. Your doctor will do several tests to help find the cause and to make sure your urinary system works properly. Finding out the cause is the first and most important step. Once the cause of bed-wetting is found your doctor will work with you and your family to come up with a plan to fix the problem. So do not be embarrassed to ask for help.

I sometimes have seizures. What can cause them? I take medicine before I come to school and before I go to bed and it helps. Thanks. Virgil Walker (age 8).

This is a great question Virgil. Your brain is a collection of nerves that act like a computer that sends electric signals to all the muscles of your body telling them when to move. Sometimes the brain turns on all of these nerves at once, making the whole body shake. This is called a seizure. The seizure likely makes you feel very tired and confused for several minutes, but the seizure itself is not dangerous. It's only dangerous if you have a seizure while climbing on something high or riding on a vehicle like a 4-wheeler or snowmachine. In many cases, doctors do not know what causes a person's seizures. Sometimes they are caused by an infection, a head injury, or a problem that occurred when the brain was forming, but most of the time we never find out the cause. Keep up the good work in school. Keep taking your medication. Maybe someday you can become a scientist or doctor who helps us find out how to cure seizures.

Dear Dr. Bob.

How do you get eczema and how do I take care of it? From Ada

Many people have trouble with eczema during the wintertime, so I am glad you asked this question. Your skin is like the outside of a house. The wall of the house protects the inside from the wind, rain. and snow. Your skin protects your body from germs and dirt. Cracks in your skin can let in germs that make your skin itch really badly. Your skin, just like the outside of a house, needs to be painted to prevent cracking. But we do not cover our skin with paint; instead, we use special creams and ointments that contain ingredients like petrolatum or ceramide. Most doctors recommend a soak-and-slather method where you soak your skin for a few minutes and then slather a thick cream or ointment over the skin to lock in the moisture. If your skin gets worse, a doctor can prescribe stronger medicines to help get control of the rash, but you should always return to covering the skin, like painting a house, with a cream or ointment every day. It is very important to protect your skin.

Dear Dr. Bob.

I sometimes get a really runny nose with lots of greenish goobers that last forever! It makes my head hurt and makes me feel tired and icky. What should I do? Athena Tuell (age 7).

Sometimes I get the greenish goobers too. Doctors call this problem, "rhinorrhea." Most of the time the nose runs with clear mucus anytime we go into the cold or eat spicy food. This is normal. If the mucus turns thick and green it means our body is either reacting to an allergen like dust or mold, or fighting off a virus or bacteria and trying to push it out of the body. When this happens, drink lots of fluid to make your nose run more. This will push out the infection or allergen. Second, eat lots of vegetables because these give your body nutrients to fight infection. If the problem does not get better, a doctor can help you find a way to treat the problem or determine if the problem is caused by an allergy.

Dear Dr. Bob,

I sometimes get lots of pressure in my head and ears when I get a cold. Is it OK to plug my nose and blow to help with the pressure? It lets me sniff and breathe for a minute and its squeaky in my ears it makes me dizzy to and I do not know if it is safe to do. Thanks. Trenten Ellison (2nd grade).

This is a great question. Did you know that your ears do two jobs? As you know, they help you hear, but they also have tiny levels that help you keep your balance, even when vour eves are closed. There is a tube that connects the inside of your ears to the back of your throat. When you hold your nose and blow, it forces air back through this tube into your ears. If air rushes into one side more than the other it will confuse your brain

Beginning January 1, 2011, the Alaska Immunization program will no longer supply vaccines for persons over 18 years of age.

Why? Budget cuts! A prevention program that doesn't work? No! To deal with this budget decrease the state "was forced" to choose between dropping adult vaccine distribution (which cost approximately $1million in 2009) at a time when the State of Alaska passed an $11 billion budget in 2010 and has over $35 billion is the Alaska Permanent Fund plus other reserves, and funny money accounts ($1million is 1/1100 of the $11billion budget of 2010).

This affects Td/Tdap, pneumococcal polysaccharide (PPV23) and influenza. Further vaccines for adults will not, I say will not be available at Public Health Centers, even if an individual is willing to pay the cost of the vaccine.

In the future, the Affordable Care Act may assure coverage for recommended vaccines.

A notice to providers was issued 11-29-2010. Persons may call the Alaska Immunization Helpline at 1-888-430-4321 for further information regarding the elimination of adult vaccine distribution by the Alaska Immunization Program.

Contact your Congressional Delegation and request immediate restoration of the federal 317 fund.

Contact your local Public Health Center for further details. Chuck Wheeler Nome, Alaska

saying it sincerely

By Rev. Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God for theNome Ministerial Association

A Mulligan from God!

Before moving to Alaska I pastored several churches in the Lower 48. I used to take time every now and then to go out to the local golf course and play a couple of rounds with my son or one of the other pastors in the area. As I played this game, I found that more often that not, there were times when I hit this little orange or white ball and instead of going in the direction I wanted, it went in a totally different direction. Well, the more I played this wonderful "relaxing" game, the more familiar I became with the term "mulligan." Actually, Mr. Mulligan and I became quite close during our golfing relationship. It seemed like every time I showed up at the course (any course); he also showed up and helped me through what could have been some very discouraging moments of play. I must say that if it were not for his help and sense of discretion, I would have given up the game early on.

A "mulligan" can basically be defined as an opportunity to hit the ball from that same location again without having to add a penalty stroke to your score. So, as you can see, I am very thankful for Mr. Mulligan.

You know, each day can be filled with moments when we wish we could step back and literally do something differently than we just did. I guess when we were kids we called this a do-over. In our daily walk with Christ, there are moments when we wish we had a mulligan to use or a do-over moment. Sometimes we do something that isn't pleasing to the Lord or act in a way that doesn't exactly show those around us that we are who we say we are; God's Children. These are times when we wish we had just one more shot to get it right or make things right.

Our heavenly Father has actually given us a mulligan of sorts. A chance for a do- over. He's given us the opportunity to "get it right or make things right" through his son, Jesus Christ. He sent Jesus to die for our sins and in doing so, he has given us the opportunity to enter into a close and personal relationship once again through his son. If you read John 3:16 and 17 this becomes most evident.

"For God so loved the world (you & I), that he sent his one and only son, that whoever believes in him shall not perish but have eternal life. For God did not send his son into the world to condemn the world, but to save the world through him."

Perhaps the Lord has been speaking to your heart lately. Perhaps he's been trying to draw you in just a little bit closer in relationship to him. Maybe he's heard you say, in your heart or maybe even out loud, that you wish you had a do-over concerning your walk with him. Well, today is the day, this is the moment you've been waiting for, my friend. Let go of the past and begin to live for him today. Open your eyes and your heart and begin to look ahead to a glorious, fulfilling future as you turn your heart and life over to him afresh and anew. May the Lord bless you with a mulligan today!

TIER II REPORTING

Local

Emergency

NOME

Planning

Committee

The Nome LEPC is presenting government agencies and private entities in the Bering Straits Region with information related to Tier II reporting requirements. This is in accordance with federal regulations in Title III of the Superfund Amendments and Reauthorization Act of 1986, Section 312, Public Law 99499, codified at 42 U.S.C. Section 11022. The Act is also known as SARA Title III.

Annual Tier II reports are required by organizations that maintain a physical inventory of applicable hazardous chemicals in quantities that are equal to or exceed threshold limits. Some organizations are exempt from reporting requirements per SARA Title III or other federal regulations. All organizations are exempt for inventory below threshold limits.

Tier II reporting provides specific information to the public, local government (including the Fire Department), and state government, about hazardous chemicals present at your facility at any time during the year. Complete reporting includes submitting a copy of the Materials Safety Data Sheet (MSDS) for all chemicals that meet threshold limits.

Your organization may receive a letter in the next few weeks. Detailed information and instructions will be included in the packet. If you do not receive a letter, please contact the Nome LEPC by calling (907)443-8255 or if you have any questions as to whether or not your organization may be required to submit annual inventory reports in accordance with the Act.

This notice is paid for by the Local Emergency Planning Committee Grant, State of Alaska

Committee assignments firmed up

The Alaska delegation last week announced their committee and subcommittee assignments for the 112th Congress. Congressman Don Young is the new chairman for the subcommittee on Indian and Alaska Native Affairs, and sits on the subcommittee on Fisheries, Wildlife, Oceans, and Insular Affairs and the subcommittee on National Parks, Forests, and Public Affairs. Senator Lisa Murkowski is the ranking member of the committee on Energy and Natural Resources. She is on five subcommittees in the Committee on Appropriations; on two subcommittees in the Committee on Health, Education, Labor and Pensions and on the Committee on Indian Affairs. Sen. Mark Begich is on the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation, the Armed Services Committee and the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Rep. Young introduces bill to limit EPA's veto power

Congressman Don Young introduced a bill last week that would amend the Clean Water Act to remove the Environmental Protection Agency's ability to veto an Army Corps of Engineers decision regarding 404 permits. With the intent to streamline permitting process for resource developers. Young said that projects in Alaska have been shut down or delayed by the EPA, "which serves only as an extension of the Administration's anti-resource development stance." Under Section 404 of the Clean Water Act, the Corps of Engineers issues permits for placing dredged material and fill material into an area defined as a disposal site. The Administrator of the EPA can veto a Corps' decision to issue a permit if it believes there is an unacceptable adverse impact to shellfish beds and fishery areas, municipal water supplies, recreational areas, or wildlife.

Legislators try to boost economy

A bipartisan group of legislators led by Senator Bill Wielechowski (D - Anchorage) unveiled legislation aimed at strengthening Alaskan businesses: the Small Business Revolving Loan Fund and capitalization of a new loan program for small business energy-efficiency upgrades. The Small Business Revolving Loan Fund would allow Alaskan businesses to take out small, short-term loans from the state. Many banks prefer large, long-term loans; these small business loans, however, would top out at $50,000 for one person and $100,000 for two or more persons. The loans would need to be repaid within six years.

The second piece of legislation would capitalize a loan program created last year to reduce costs and increase profitability for businesses that invest in energy efficiency. This fund aims to help businesses afford the up-front costs of energy efficiency and save money in the long term.

Governor continues battle with feds

Governor Sean Parnell was not happy with a recent decision by U.S. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar to evaluate 87 million acres of federal land in Alaska as potential "wild lands." In comments submitted to the Department of the Interior, Governor Parnell said Interior's wild lands designation will diminish access to federal lands and that it would cost jobs and have a chilling effect on potential resource developers. Parnell was furious that the evaluation was made without congressional input. Parnell said that BLM managers' discretion to determine where and when 'impairment' of wilderness characteristics is 'appropriate' is subject to undue scrutiny and approval in Washington D.C., where decisions tend to be political and knowledge of local conditions, issues, and needs is diluted.

Wyoming Senator moves to gut environmental protection laws

Sen. John Barrasso (R-Wyo.) introduced a bill aimed at repealing federal protections against the buildup of carbon pollution. The bill would exempt greenhouse gases from regulation under the Clean Air Act, Clean Water Act, National Environmental Policy Act, Endangered Species Act and other bedrock environmental laws.

The Environmental Protection Agency has begun using the Clean Air Act to reduce greenhouse gas pollution from cars and trucks, power plants, refineries and other smokestack polluters, acting on an order of the US Supreme Court that said in 2007 that greenhouse gases are pollutants.

Legal Notice

Important information about the $3.4 billion Indian Trust Settlement

For current or former IIM account holders, owners of land held in trust or restricted status, or their heirs

There is a proposed Settlement in Cobell v. Salazar, a class action lawsuit about individual Indian land held in trust by the federal government. This notice is just a summary. For details, call the toll-free number or visit the website listed below.

The lawsuit claims that the federal government violated its duties by (a) mismanaging trust funds/assets, (b) improperly accounting for those funds, and (c) mismanaging trust land/assets. The trust funds include money collected from farming and grazing leases, timber sales, mining, and oil and gas production from land owned by American Indians/Alaska Natives.

If you are included in the Settlement, your rights will be affected. To object to the Settlement, to comment on it, or to exclude yourself, you should get a detailed notice at www.IndianTrust.com or by calling 1-800-961-6109.

Can I get money?

There are two groups or "Classes" in the Settlement eligible for payment. Each Class includes individual IIM account holders or owners of land held in trust or restricted status who were alive on September 30, 2009.

Historical Accounting Class Members

- Had an open individual Indian Money account ("IIM") anytime between October 25, 1994 and September 30, 2009, and
- The account had at least one cash transaction.
- Includes estates of account holders who died as of September 30, 2009, if the IIM account was still open on that date.

Trust Administration Class Members

- Had an IIM account recorded in currently available data in federal government systems any time from approximately 1985 to September 30, 2009, or
- Owned trust land or land in restricted status as of September 30, 2009.
- Includes estates of landowners who died as of September 30, 2009 where the trust interests were in probate as of that date. This means you have asked a court to transfer ownership of the deceased landowner's property.

An individual may be included in one or both Classes.

What does the Settlement provide?

- A $1.5 billion fund to pay those included in the Classes.
- A $1.9 billion fund to buy small interests in trust or restricted land owned by many people.
- Up to $60 million to fund scholarships to improve access to higher education for Indian youth.
- A government commitment to reform the Indian trust management and accounting system.

How much can I get?

- Historical Accounting Class Members will each get $1,000.
- Trust Administration Class Members will get at least $500.
- If you own a small parcel of land with many other people, the federal government may ask you to sell it. You will be offered fair market value. If you sell your land it will be returned to tribal control.

If you believe you are a member of either Class and are not receiving IIM account statements, you will need to call the toll-free number or visit the website to register.

What are my other rights?

- If you wish to keep your right to sue the federal government about the claims in this Settlement, you must exclude yourself by April 20, 2011.
- If you stay in the Settlement you can object to or comment on it by April 20, 2011. The detailed notice explains how to exclude yourself or object/comment.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia will hold a hearing on June 20, 2011, to consider whether to approve the Settlement. It will also consider a request for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses in the amount of $99.9 million. However, Class Counsel has fee agreements that would pay them 14.75% of the funds created for the Classes, which could result in an award of $223 million. The Court may award more or less than these amounts based on controlling law. If approved, these payments and related costs will come out of the Settlement funds available for payment to Class Members.

If you wish, you or your own lawyer may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost. For more information, call or go to the website shown below or write to Indian Trust Settlement, P.O. Box 9577, Dublin, OH 43017-4877.

NSEDC joins major Bering Sea venture

Subsidiaries buy pollock and crab quota, vessels from Wards Cove

By Laurie McNicholas

Siu Alaska Corp. and a partner, Coastal Villages Pollock, acquired 2.9 percent of the annual Bering Sea pollock quota, seven trawl vessels and one crabber from Wards Cove Packing Co. on Feb. 1, reports Siu President John Eckels. The companies formed BSAI Partners, LLC to buy the assets of Alaska Boat Co. in Unalaska from Wards Cove.

Siu Alaska is a wholly owned subsidiary of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., and Coastal Villages Pollock is a wholly owned subsidiary of Coastal Villages Regional Fund. NSEDC and CVRF are two of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program, which receives allocations of the annual total allowable catch of pollock, other groundfish and crab in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands area. NSEDC currently receives 2.2 percent of the annual Bering Sea pollock TAC through the CDQ program.

A press release issued Feb. 1 stated that Wards Cove was sold to BSAI Partners. "The acquisition of Wards Cove include seven trawl and one crab vessel, as well as ownership in nearly 4 percent of the pollock quota," it said. The release did not mention Alyeska Seafoods, a processing plant in Unalaska partially owned by Wards Cove, or the seven general stores owned by Cove, one of which is Nome Trading

The Nome Nugget asked Eckels to clarify information in the press release and requested additional information about the transaction via email. Following are the Nugget's questions and Eckels' replies.

NN: Did BSAI Partners purchase the portion of Alyeska Seafoods that Wards Cove owns? I've read that Maruha Nichiro owns 65 percent of Alyeska Seafoods.

NN: If BSAI did purchase Wards Cove's ownership interest in Alyeska Seafoods, will Maruha Nichiro be BSAI's operating partner in Alyeska Seafoods? Will BSAI sell its harvests from the pollock quota purchased from Wards Cove to Alyeska Seafoods for processing?

Eckels: See comments above, and yes the trawlers will deliver the pollock harvested to the Alyeska plant.

NN: Did BSAI Partners purchase the seven general stores that Wards Cove owns, one of which is Nome Trading Co. in Nome?

Eckels: No.

NN: Is the nearly 4 percent of the pollock TAC that BSAI purchased the sum total of pollock quota allocated to the seven trawl vessels via the American Fisheries Act?

Eckels: The nearly 4 percent of TAC is the total pollock resource owned by the vessels; our ownership portion of that is 2.9 percent (72.6 percent) as Maruha also owns a portion of the vessels.

NN: Who or what entity will manage operation of the seven trawl vessels and the crab vessel?

Gov. talks briefly on Health Care lawsuit and big ticket Susitna River hydroelectric project

By Nancy McGuire

Governor Sean Parnell could spare only a few minutes to talk with The Nugget. He remained standing and wanted the questions to be quick. So

He was asked if he thought Alaska should pull out of the lawsuit claiming the new Health Care Reform law is unconstitutional. He did not want to hear any background or opinion why Alaskans need the law. He maintained that the lower courts were correct in finding it unconstitutional. He said that it would have to be decided by the Supreme Court.

Senator Donnie Olson sat in on the interview after telling the Governor that he used to be a newsboy for The Nugget. When the Governor left, Olson commented that the lower courts in years past also ruled that civil rights legislation was unconsti-

When asked why he proposed funding a $5 billion dam on the Susitna River, Parnell said that it was a developmental incentive that would go a long way to making Alaska energy independent by the year 2025.

He did not address the problem of building a dam on a fault line or glacial silting behind the dam. He said the plan has been recently downsized from the old proposal from over 30

He said rural Alaska would be compensated through Power Cost Equalization. He said that rural energy is an all-Alaskan solution and if Nome came up with a plan to drill gas wells, then the state would likely be interested in partnering.

The Governor was anxious to get on to his next event and hurried out

Letters —

Dear Nancy,

I stopped by Milano's to get lunch last week, and noticed a new sign on the back parking lot: "Reserved for FAA." Once noted, I moved over so I was out of the way of the sign, and went in to lunch. Was I surprised when I came back, 15 minutes later, to discover my car gone. It took me another hour to find out where they had taken it. It seems FAA has reserved not just the area around that sign, but ALL of that back lot. That should have been worthy of a public notice in the paper, or Nome Announce, or at least a poster on the wall of Milano's, in my opinion.

Then I got to thinking, "Doesn't FAA do all its business at the airport?" Don't they own all the housing, shops and offices just north of the airport as well? What are they doing reserving a downtown parking lot? Recession or not, this may be government expansion I can't agree with.

If you combine this new reserved space with the federal reserved parking lot between the Polar and the Post Office, it doesn't leave much parking for regular people or the businesses we want to keep in the "downtown" area. Maybe it's time they took some of that parking congestion and put it at the top of Steadman, after all.

Then, I got to talking about this to the front table of the Polar Cub, and they were all amazed that it happened so fast, both the takeover of the parking lot, and the actual car towing operation. "That's the fastest we've ever seen the federal government do anything in Nome," was their cleanest, and least cynical, comment. With the government going broke, they wanted to know where it got the extra money to "reserve" the parking spaces for regular employees. Why were they so much more special than the other regular employees in that area? Someone concluded this was the federal employees' way of getting back at the recent pay freeze they were just handed. This way they will always have special parking perks, at least.

It's going to make it a lot more expensive to eat at Milano's if you add in this hidden cost. The car towing costs more than a pizza. Maybe the City Council could look at government reservation of parking in what they want to designate as their "Business Area," if they really want to keep the center of town where it is now. Nome is getting more cars than most of them remember when they first were elected.

I'll get over my fines, and maybe even learn my lesson, eventually. Fortunately, I only had to pay a local company to get my car back. I don't know how long it would take or how big a pile of paperwork I would need if I had to go through the government to get it back. I'm hoping this will serve as some sort of public notice not to park in the back of Milano's anymore. The airport has moved downtown and is taking your cars! Lew Tobin Nome, AK 99762

Staff Update

It's a new year and a new legislative session! I have some new faces joining my staff this session and I look forward to the work we will accomplish during these 90 days. My staff include Denise Liccioli, David Scott, Sydney Seay, and Loren Peterson.

Education Fly In Week

I have enjoyed the surge of Education Boards and Superintendents visiting from the district. I have met with school boards from the North Slope Bering School District, the Kashunamuit School District of Chevak, the Lower Yukon School District, the Saint Mary's School District as well as the UAF teachers and students. Education is the key factor in improving the quality of life in our district and communities. I will continue to seek new ways to deliver quality education to our students in rural Alaska. I'd also like to encourage those entering college or other post secondary education in Alaska to apply for the Alaska Performance Scholarship. Apply online at http://akadvantage.alaska.gov/.

This merit-based scholarship is intended to provide incentive for students to take a more demanding curriculum to better prepare for college or job training and success. It will improve graduation rates and make higher education more affordable for Alaska's families. The incentive is designed to increase college enrollment and keep our students in Alaska resulting in a better workforce in our future.

Alaska Coastal Management Program

Two ACMP bills have been introduced to the Senate. One is SB 45, which is sponsored by Governor Parnell, which extends the current Coastal Management Program to six years. The other, SB 56, has been sponsored by Senate Finance Committee. This bill will extend the current program for one year. Both bills have been referred to the Community and Regional Affairs committee,

Big Expensive Dam

Governor Parnell wants to reach the goal of 50 percent renewable energy by 2025. To do this he proposes spending $5 billion bucks on a 700 ft high dam on the scenic Susitna River. Wow! Sounds impressive. Hopefully the state has taken into account some obvious problems. There is the Denali Fault line as a possible earthquake concern. Of course a remedy would be to kill the seismic detection budget so we won't know about problems in an earthquake prone region. Then there's the glacial silt factor. The Susitna is a glacier fed river and will silt up behind the dam. Then there's the fish factor and salmon spawning. Where's the snail darter when we need it? This $5 billion dam promises to generate more problems than power.

Who among us would want to live downstream below such a dam? Of course we don't have to, but isn't it a damned shame our state would even think about such a risky project just to leave a power legacy? Surely we could spend $5 billion to better serve the energy needs or the entire state. How many solar arrays and wind farms would that money buy? How many homes could be winterized? We could even drill a couple gas wells in and around Nome to keep Nome Joint Utilities' generators humming. Nome could be cooking with gas and we wouldn't need a Trans Canada pipeline.

Alaska should think more than twice and listen to objective science that says it is stupid to spend $5 billion on a dam that is on a fault line. It is also not fair to spend so much money on a project that will only serve a small section of the state and makes the rest of us feel like chopped liver. Perhaps Alaskans would be better served if we channeled these big bucks into education so we can have a better understanding of science, math and critical thinking. —N.L.M.—

By Rep. Neal Foster House District 39 Greetings from Juneau on Day 15 of the legislative session!

The Alaska House passed the first bill of the session yesterday, and it was substantive: House Bill 16 to extend the Alaska senior benefits payment program by four years. Without it, this form of public assistance would die by the end of June. With it, more than 10,000 elders can be assured of getting their monthly checks of $125, $175, or $250 – depending on their level of need.

The legislation is sponsored by Anchorage Representative Mike Hawker, who deserves credit for the current program which he helped forge four years ago through an amendment he authored to a bill the legislature approved that was sponsored by Golovin Senator Donny Olson. Senior benefits arose from the ashes, if you will, from the old longevity bonus program, which Governor Frank Murkowski ended in 2003 in response to low oil prices and tight budgets.

Senior benefits are a huge boon to those elders who face financial challenges and use their monthly checks to help pay for the basics in life: food, heat, electricity, housing, or medicine. For some, that monthly stipend can mean the difference between staying at home and leaving it for good. Besides providing elders with financial stability, many say it gives them peace of mind. Supporting those who have supported us makes sense – especially if it helps assure that they can live near or with their families

The program costs more than $20.5 million a year and serves 10,093 seniors – 1,071 of whom get $250 a month; 3,872 receive $175; and 5,150 get $125.

The House seemed to believe that this is money well spent. Members approved HB 16 unanimously, 37 to 0. It now awaits action in the Alaska Senate.

Stroll in Anchorage ends in hypothermia

A 19-year old man ended up being rescued by Anchorage police and his dad when he went for a walk at Kincaid Park. When Nathan Miller didn't return home, his friend called police. A search party made its way to the beach on a little used trail and found the hypothermic man sitting on a small hill. Miller had been hiking on the ice at the beach at low tide when the tide changed. He ended up floating on a small iceberg, but eventually had to go into the water to get back to the beach. He was wearing jogging clothing when they found him and showed obvious signs of hypothermia. Anchorage Fire Department medics took the man to a local hospital, where he was treated for hypothermia and released the following morning.

Grants to Alaska

The Alaska Congressional Delegation last week announced the following grants awarded communities in the State of Alaska. The Bureau of Ocean and Energy Management awarded $637,800 to the State of Alaska for evaluating the distribution and status of polar bears to improve oil and gas mitigation in the Chukchi Sea. The Department of Agriculture awarded $483,705 to the Norton Sound Health Corporation to expand access to health care services through USDA's Distance Learning and Telemedicine Program.

Shell cancels exploration plans in Beaufort Sea

Shell announced last week that it would not drill this summer in the Beaufort Sea, citing regulatory uncertainties. While the Alaska delegation and governor Sean Parnell quickly blamed the Environmental Protection Agency for Shell's decision, the EPA said that the decision was up to Shell. The EPA granted an air permit to Shell, but it was challenged by various conservation groups and Native tribal entities. The Environmental Appeals board did overturn the permit. APRN reports that unless Shell works with the board to address the concerns raised. the EPA can't move forward.

Salmon Lake land conveyance again introduced in Senate

U.S. Senators Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich once again introduced a bill that would ratify a settlement between the state of Alaska, the federal Bureau of Land Management and the Bering Straits Native Corp. regarding lands around Salmon Lake. "The shareholders of the Bering Straits region have waited 40 years to finally receive the land and economic benefits promised to them when they relinquished their aboriginal land claims," said Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska. The land conveyance requires an act of Congress. An identical bill passed the House of Representatives last year, but didn't move through the Senate. Under the Alaska Statehood Act, the state selected lands around Salmon Lake that had also been selected by Bering Straits Native Corp. under ANCSA. The state and BSNC relinquished some claims to settle the dispute. The agreement conveys 3,084 acres of land around the lake to the state and 14,645 acres to BSNC, while BLM maintains ownership of the nine-acre campground with access to other federal lands nearby.

Catholic church safety investigator visits Alaska

FAIRBANKS (AP) - A child safety investigator for the Roman Catholic Church is visiting Alaska to make sure churches are in compliance with safety policies and procedure designed to prevent sex abuse. The Fairbanks Daily News-Miner reports that Catholic churches are now required to submit detailed audits annually affirming that they are in compliance with the Charter for the Protection of Children and Young People approved by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops in 2002. The visiting investigator, Teresa Kettlekamp, has an extensive background in law enforcement. She says the charter's guidelines include training for all clergy, employees and volunteers to recognize the behavior of sex offenders and what to do about it.

Lawmakers want deadline for AGIA and other bills

Four members of the Alaska State House majority caucus introduced a bill that aims to attach a date and a timeline to the Alaska Gasline Inducement Act and to see if AGIA passed under the Palin administration - is still viable. House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, Craig Johnson, R-Anchorage, Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, and Kurt Olson, R-Kenai championed the bill and said that a deadline was badly needed and "Let's get this project started or get on with something else."

The aversion to federal conservation efforts spilled into the Alaska Legislature, and Anchorage Republican Rep. Charisse Millet sponsored a bill to urge the United States Congress to refrain from passing legislation that designates land in Area 1002 of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as wilderness.

Governor Sean Parnell, encouraged by a Florida court ruling that declared the "individual mandate" of last year's health care reform unconstitutional, went to his attorney general and asked what steps he can take

The Senate Education Committee introduced a bill that would allow for modest increases to the Base Student Allocation over a three-year period. The bill also creates a vocational education fund designed for high school students.

Senator Joe Thomas, D-Fairbanks said that this would help out schools with rising costs. However, the increase is only over two percent for the next three years, which does not keep up with the inflation rate. The bill would raise the Base Student Allocation by $110 in fiscal year 2012, $115 in fiscal

Marine Advisory Program hires Gay Sheffield as Bering Strait agent

By Doug Schneider Alaska Sea Grant Program

Nome resident and state marine mammal biologist Gay Sheffield has been hired as the new Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program agent for the Bering Strait region. She will be based at the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus in Nome.

Sheffield has been a marine mammal biologist with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game since 1997, and has been assigned to the ADF&G regional office in Nome for the past three years.

"She's been working with residents of the villages in the region for more than a decade, and has a great rapport with people there," said Chuck Crapo, seafood scientist with Alaska Sea Grant and chair of the hiring committee. "Her experience with local issues, her science and biology background, and her connections to the region are what swayed the hiring committee. We are looking forward to her joining our team on Feb. 28."

Sheffield's work in the Bering Strait began in 1992, working with residents and researchers on studies of walruses, ice seals, belugas, and bowhead whales. Most recently, her work with Saint Lawrence Island residents documented the ongoing range extension of Steller sea lions into the Bering Strait, as well as the diet and feeding behavior of bowhead whales during the spring and late fall in the Bering Sea.

"Among its many great qualities, the Marine Advisory Program provides technical assistance, educational and economic opportunities to coastal communities," said Sheffield. "I look forward to being part of MAP here in the Bering Strait region, and working with our coastal communities on important issues including marine safety, subsistence, marine mammals, fisheries, and community economic development.'

Sheffield holds a master's degree in marine biology from the University of Alaska Fairbanks, and is a UAF affiliate research associate of mammalogy.

The Nome MAP office has been without an agent since March 2010, when start-up funding from the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation ended. The Alaska Legislature authorized $300,000 in 2010 to fill vacant MAP positions in Nome and Kodiak, and to make permanent the existing positions in Unalaska, Cordova, Dillingham and Petersburg. The University of Alaska Fairbanks reprogrammed an additional $300,000 to support these positions.

"The people of the Bering Strait region and NSEDC need to be thanked for their support of this position," said Paula Cullenberg, leader of the Marine Advisory Program. "I share their interest and concern for Alaska's Bering Strait and Arctic regions. Gay has the background and expertise to make sure the residents of the region are involved in the research and decision-making process in this important part of the state." ### Sen. McCain seeks to cut Essential Air Services

By Diana Haecker

Senator John McCain (R-Arizona) proposed an amendment to the Federal Aviation Administration reauthorization bill that was aimed to cut a subsidy to support essential air services to rural communities.

The so-called Essential Air Services program supports commercial air service to 44 Alaska communities who rely on air transport as their primary source of goods, mail and medical supplies.

According to the office of aviation analysis, in Alaska the bulk of EAS subsidies goes to Alaska Airlines. The latest report from May 2010 shows that altogether, Alaska received $12,564,000 to subsidize air transportation via Alaska, Pen Air, Island Air, Warbelow's, Ward Air, Wings, Ellis Air and others, serving mostly to southeast and interior villages. For example, Alaska Air received more than $2.7 million to fly into Yakutat, another $2.7 million to fly into Cordova and $1.5 million to fly into Adak. According to the transportation department, no airline from northwestern or western Alaska received subsidies to fly to any of the northwest Alaska villages

Alaska Senator Mark Begich and Sens. Ben Nelson (D-NE), Bob

Casey (D-PA) and Joe Manchin (D-WV) sent a letter to Sen. McCain opposing the elimination of EAS. Begich asked that McCain abandon his attempts to repeal EAS. The program was established in 1978 after the deregulation of the airline industry to guarantee that small communities that were served by certificated air carriers before deregulation maintain a minimal level of scheduled air service. The program subsidizes commuter airlines to serve approximately 140 rural communities across the country that otherwise would not receive any scheduled air service.

1908 Aurora Yearbook: Nome High School history

Another jewel from the treasure trove of history in the Archives of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum

How did we get to where we are today? Check out the history of the Nome School as reported by student Jess White in the 1908 Aurora Yearbook published by the Nome High School

Third Beach Line: may be looked upon as the largest "pay streak" in Northwestern Alaska.

During this last winter what is supposed to be this same pay streak has been found at Safety and Solomon, and although no very important strikes have been made yet, much is expected of it.

Jess White, 1908

History of the Nome School

Although there were thousands of people settled along the shores of Bering Sea at Nome as early as 1898 and 1899, there was no need for a school. In those years, men came to Nome to make their fortunes in a few days and return to their families on the "out-side." When men learned that their fortunes, if made at all, were to be won by long months of labor they sent for their families.

Then arose the question of education. The census was taken and the first Nome school was opened by the government in 1900. Misses Mausey and Young were hired to instruct the 25 pupils of this little school. Brown's Hall, on Front Street, was the first schoolroom. The pupils, Eskimos and Japs as well as white children assembled here. The room was poorly furnished. There were no desks, but all the students sat on a long bench before a table. Most of the instruction was given with pencil and paper as they were supplied with few books. The larger boys acted as janitors and brought driftwood from the beach to keep the classroom warm through the long Arctic winter.

By 1901 Congress had passed a law by which one-half of all liquor and tobacco license was to be contributed to the school fund. From that time, the school came under the supervision of the city. The number of pupils had increased to double that of the first year, and to accommodate all, a division was made in the school. The Bridge School on the Sandspit, taught by Miss Mausey, was opened for the younger pupils, while the older ones attended the school taught by Miss Young in the old library building on Second Street.

In 1902 another division was made. A school was opened over the Lobby Saloon on Stedman Avenue for all the pupils east of Hunter's Way. Mr. Riley, the first principal, and Miss Mausey taught here, while Miss Young continued to teach in the old library on Second Street and Mrs. Staples had charge of the Bridge School on the Sandspit.

In 1903 the main building of the present school was completed. All the pupils except those of the Bridge School came to it. In 1905, however, when a promise was given to convey the little ones to school in a sleigh during the winter months, the Bridge School was closed, and now rooms for the high school. In addition to these improvements, the small room in the attic formerly used as the fifth and sixth grade classroom, was converted into a laboratory. In 1906 a room on the second floor was fitted up as an art room. Just before the opening the present term, the room was enlarged to double its size, to accommodate the large incoming class. Under the supervision of Miss Kruze and her successor, Mrs. Wheeler, the pupils have made great progress in drawing and painting.

The two courses, the Literary and Latin courses, provided in the high school, are in the charge of Professor Grimm, teacher of Chemistry, Physics and the various branches of Mathematics, of Miss Smith, teacher of English, German and French, and of Miss Gilmer, teacher of Latin and History.

The Borean Society is the literary organization of the high school. It was organized in 1905 to promote the literary interests of the school. This winter, programs consisting of musical and literary numbers were rendered every Friday. Also many business and professional men lectured, among others was Captain Mikkelsen, the famous northern explorer, who related to us his routes and experiences in the North. These talks proved very beneficial.

During the middle of the winter the students of the eighth grade challenged the freshman of the Society to a debate. The subject was "Territorial Government in Alaska." The high school took the affirmative, while the negative remained for the eighth grade. A very hot discussion on the subject followed, which showed strongly the oratorical ability of both sides.

The judges decided in favor of the eighth grade. They were very jubilant and we are glad to know that next year we will possess all the talent now in the eighth grade.

A new feature of enjoyment was started this winter in the form of a social and dance every month, which has had a tendency to bring the students together in a social way and increase the school spirit. The entertainment given under the auspices of the Borean Society on the 11 of March was financially a success, thanks to the generous patronage of Nome's public.

The funds raised will be used to establish a library for the use of the students. Next year we hope to have an addition of a club and library room. A beginning of the library was started early in the winter, when a set of Ridpath's General Histories was purchased, also Mr. Yorkey Sykes gave to the school a set of Natural Histories as a start for our library.

We have all striven hard and hope that the graduation class forming the eighth grade will enter the high school under better conditions than any previous freshmen class.

all are accommodated in the present building.

Every year the number of pupils has increased.

The High School was founded in 1903 by Professor Henry, successor of Professor Riley and was conducted for over two years in the one room. # NSEDC board funds regional and community projects totaling $510,000

By Laurie McNicholas

The Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board awarded $40,000 to Norton Sound Health Corp. to help fund a full-time instructor for the Bering Strait Registered Nurse Program at a meeting Jan. 27 in Nome. The BSRN Program aims to help four students sponsored by the Bering Strait Health Consortium to complete their RN degrees in Nome. The students will work for NSHC as full-time nurses after they receive their degrees.

The board also awarded grants for two other regional projects and 15 community projects under the 2011 Outside Entity Funding Program. Funding levels for this year's program remained at the 2010 program level—$100,000 for regional projects and $60,000 for non-fisheries related projects in each of NSEDC's 15 member communities.

2010 NSEDC awarded $100,000 to the BSRN program. This year NSHC requested $82,944 to fund a full-time instructor for the program, but the NSEDC board decided to use 60 percent of the available $100,000 for other regional projects. The board granted $49,710 to the Native Village of Unalakleet for a sub-regional long-term care project called "Keeping Elders in Place," and $10,290 to Kawerak, Inc. for computers for the Community Planning and Development Grant Writer Assistance Program. Kawerak requested $28,772 to provide computers to contract grant writers in 18 of the 20 tribal offices in region

NVU's sub-regional long-term care project is designed to provide agency delivered home care and other related services by a trained workforce operating in Unalakleet, Stebbins, St. Michael, Shaktoolik and Koyuk. The project seeks to meet the needs for assisted living and other forms of housing support for elders in the five partner villages. The outside entity grant will be used to plan and develop preliminary designs for a facility, and to estimate construction and operation costs.

NSEDC board members discussed whether the sub-regional project qualifies for regional entity funding prior to approving NVU's grant application. Unalakleet's representative William (Middy) Johnson argued that it does, and a majority of board members voted to fund it as a regional project. He said the NSEDC grant will fund an extension of a project currently under way to take care of elders and employ people in each of the five partner villages. The project is setting up training for Certified Nursing Assistants and Personal Care Attendants in Fairbanks, he added.

Community projects approved The NSEDC board approved

The NSEDC board approved funding applications for 15 projects in 10 of its member communities for a combined cost of $409,676.95 this year. That amount is less than half of the $900,000—$60,000 for each of 15 member communities—allocated for non-fishery related community projects in 2011. The Outside Entity Funding Program allows communities to roll over funds from one year to the next for later use if they choose not to apply for project funds or if they apply for only part of the funds available to them in a given year.

The 2011 projects approved for funding are grouped by community in the following list, which includes the amount of each grant and the entity that applied for it.

- City of Elim, $19,378.51 for a Mopec KC 200 morgue refrigerator, and $1,678.72 for computers for the Ernest Nylin Memorial Library; Native Village of Elim, $10,000 for a commercial sawmill.
- Native Village of Gambell, $13,110

- for a summer youth snack program.

   Chinik Eskimo Community in Golovin, $25,000 for a new store building
- Native Village of Koyuk, $50,267.52 for a Koyuk Elder meal program.
- Nome Nanook Booster Club proposal, $38,000; Nome Swimming Pool, $21,288 for a school swimming program.
- Native Village of St. Michael, $9,774.20 for Community Building bulk fuel tanks.
- City of Savoonga, $60,000 for construction of a steel garage.
- Teller Traditional Council, $48,000 for vehicle garage; City of Teller, $12,000 additional funding for a dump truck purchase.
- Native Village of Wales, $41,180 for cultural activities travel.
- City of White Mountain, $30,000 for cemetery site construction; Native Village of White Mountain, $30,000 for new water/sewer service.

A community review committee composed of the community's NSEDC board member and others selected by the board member chose one or more projects to submit to NSEDC for outside entity funding, said Paul Ivanoff III, NSEDC's community benefits director. He presented project applications for the 2011 Outside Entity Funding Program to the NSEDC board, along with staff recommendations for which applications to consider as community projects and which to consider as regional projects.

Ivanoff and Galsy Ashenfelter, community benefits specialist, provided The Nome Nugget with most of the information in this report.

Eckels: Alyeska does produce surimi along with all the various pollock products, (i.e.), various forms of filets, fishmeal, fish oil, etc. What product the pollock is turned into normally depends on market conditions.

NN: How much crab quota is allocated to the crab vessel Siu and Coastal Villages Pollock acquired?

Eckels: NSEDC directly purchased all the crab interests (BSAI did not retain any crab), approximately 1 million pounds.

NN: What did Siu pay for its ownership portion of the nearly 4 percent of pollock quota and of the vessels and other assets of Alaska Roat Co.?

Eckels: Undisclosed.

NN: How was Siu's share of the purchase of pollock quota, the vessels and Alaska Boat Co. assets financed?

Eckels: Partially from equity injections by the partners and partially financed by Wells Fargo.

2011 pollock TAC rises

The 2011 Bering Sea pollock TAC is set at 1.25 million metric tons, a major increase compared to 813,000 metric tons in 2010, the lowest harvest quota in many years, and the 2009 TAC of 815,000 metric tons. The pollock industry generates filets, surimi paste and other products with a processed value that exceeds $1 billion.

Pollock quota is of immense value. BSAI's 2.9 percent of the 2011 harvest may yield 36,300 metric tons of pollock, and NSEDC's 2.2 share of the this year's TAC is equivalent to 27,500 metric tons. NSEDC's CDQ pollock harvest historically has produced about 90 percent of the company's revenues from CDQ fisheries, adding millions of dollars annually to its income stream.

NSEDC revises bylaws for compensating and electing board members

By Laurie McNicholas

Ten of the 15 directors of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. agreed to revise the company's rules for compensating board members during a meeting held Jan. 27 in Nome. The vote met a two-thirds majority requirement to change a bylaw.

NSEDC pays per diem and honorariums to directors for each day they attend meetings of the board, any committee of the board, or any meeting attended at the request of NSEDC, the president or chief executive officer, or the board of directors.

Under the revised compensation bylaw, an honorarium will be paid at a rate of $300 per day instead of $250 per meeting. Discussion among board members clarified that a committee member who sits on three committees that hold separate meetings in one day will receive an honorarium of $300 per day and not $300 per meeting. Some board members sit on more committees than do others.

In addition, each board member will receive a stipend of $750 a month to provide compensation for all NSEDC-related tasks occurring outside of meetings. The stipend is a new benefit. The per diem rate paid to board members will remain at $350 per day. The title of section 9 was changed from "Per Diem and Honorarium" to "Board Compensation"

William (Middy) Johnson of Unalakleet was among board members who advocated for paying honorariums at a flat rate of $300 a day without regard to the number of committee meetings a director may attend in one day. He said board members should be paid a stipend for work they do on behalf of NSEDC in their communities.

Johnson also noted that some board members want to attend committee meetings scheduled on a given day even if they do not belong to committees with meetings scheduled that day. He said a lot of business takes place in committee meetings, and if he wants to comment on a topic under discussion, that's the time to do it.

"If my committee meetings are not scheduled till Wednesday, I have to wait till mine starts, so I'm not able to attend executive committee or finance committee meetings," said Elvina Naranjo of Koyuk. Meetings of the executive committee and finance committee were held on Tuesday, Jan. 25. Harrelson said Joe

Garnie of Teller had brought up that issue, but some board members said attending meetings Wednesday through Friday was plenty due to job demands

"I recommend we all travel on the same day," said Garnie. Naranjo and Garnie were brought to Nome in time to participate in their committee meetings on Wednesday, but too late to attend the executive committee and finance committees meetings held on Tuesday.

The board agreed that members who attend meetings of committees to which they are not assigned on days when no committee to which they are assigned is scheduled should receive per diem but not an honorartion. Voting in favor of the compensation revisions were Garnie, Joel James of Gambell, Victor Joe of St. Michael, Johnson, Katcheak, Truman Kava of Savoonga, Naranjo, Frank Oxereok of Wales, Walter Sectot of Brevig Mission and Takak. Orville Ahkinga of Little Diomede, Harrelson, Dean Peterson of Golovin and Don Stiles of Nome voted against the motion. Eugene Asicksik of Shaktoolik abstained.

In response to a question from Katcheak, Ivanoff said the revised board compensation would take effect on Feb. 1

Election bylaws revised

The board unanimously approved

"I delved into the NSEDC election a little, at the city's request, and I recommended to them to contact NSEDC to seek advice on how they should deal with the election since it was a tie of 54 and 54 for both candidates for the NSEDC board election."

—LeroySeppilu

ium. Harrelson said board members may comment during meetings of committees to which they do not belong, but may not vote on issues before the committee.

Wilfred Katcheak of Stebbins moved to change board compensation to an honorarium of $300 per day and a monthly stipend of $750. Oscar Takak of Elim seconded the motion.

Harrelson asked Janis Ivanoff, who at that time was NSEDC's vice president and CEO, if Katcheak's motion was reflected in any of the options for changes in board compensation that she and Kyan Olanna, the company's general counsel, had prepared at the request of members of the bylaws committee. (The board elected Ivanoff president and CEO on Jan. 28.) Ivanoff said one of the options they developed after looking at compensation paid to boards of comparable organizations calls for honorariums of $300 per day and monthly stipends of $700.

Harrelson requested a roll call vote on Katcheak's motion. The tally was 10 yes, 4 no and 1 absten-several changes in bylaws governing the election of member representatives—board members who represent the company's 15 member communities. Prior to the revision, article three, section 5 included a requirement that each member community conduct the member election on the first Tuesday of October. The board retained that requirement but deleted it from section 5 and inserted in the first sentence of section 6, which now reads as follows:

"The city council of each member community shall conduct the member representative election on the first Tuesday of October in accordance with the requirements of Section 5 and the ordinances, rules and regulations governing municipal elections, except as may be otherwise provided in writing by the Corporation." Section 6 stipulates that a runoff election will be held if no candidate receives over 40 percent of the votes cast for member representative. It also says the city council shall notify the corporation of the election results in writing delivered before the end of the member's term of office.

The board added the following language to the new version of section 6. "In the event that a city council is not able to conduct the election, another entity in the member community, including NSEDC, may be selected by the Board of Directors to conduct the election. In the event that the member representative election must be re-held, for any reason other than a runoff, that election shall be conducted on the first Tuesday of November."

The board also changed the title of section 6 from "City Council Certification" to "Member Representative Elections."

The changes were prompted by an unusual and lengthy election process for Shaktoolik's representative. The process began on Oct. 6, 2010 when Asicksik and incumbent representative Harvey Sookiayak tied 54-54 in an NSEDC election. A municipal election for two Shaktoolik City Council seats was held concurrently on Oct. 6.

A Shaktoolik resident challenged the elections because 15 questioned ballots were thrown into the ballot box and counted, according to Leroy Seppilu, local government specialist with the Alaska Division of Community and Regional Affairs. On Nov. 5 the Shaktoolik City Council decided not to certify the elections.

Seppilu provided technical assistance to city officials in their efforts to arrange for a special municipal election. Alaska is among several states for which pre-clearance for special elections other than runoff elections is required for municipalities under Section 5 of the National Voting Rights Act of 1965. When Alaska was a U.S. territory, its voter eligibility laws included a discriminatory requirement that voters know how to speak and write in English.

Seppilu said he makes recommendations to municipalities when they have issues that require his assistance, and he noted that an NSEDC board election is not a municipal election.

"I delved into the NSEDC election a little, at the city's request, and I recommended to them to contact NSEDC to seek advice on how they should deal with the election since it was a tie of 54 and 54 for both candidates for the NSEDC board election," Seppilu told The Nome Nugget in an email last November.

The city held special elections for the NSEDC board seat and two city council seats on Jan. 11. Asicksik defeated Sookiak in the NSEDC election by a vote of 55-49. He was sworn in as an NSEDC board member on Jan. 27.

During discussion of changes in representative election bylaws, Asicksik said that in his opinion, NSEDC could have held a runoff election for Shaktoolik's board seat separate from the special municipal election the city conducted on Jan. 11.

"Shaktoolik asked us to work with them, so we did," Ivanoff replied. "We did not have this language."

"If that came up again, we would be able to have one earlier than January," Harrelson said.

As of Monday, the Shaktoolik City Council had not yet met to certify either the special NSEDC election or the special municipal election held Jan. 11. The Nome City Council has opted not to certify NSEDC's member representative elections.

Nome celebrates Governor Parnell's inaugural event

By Nancy McGuire

Nome held a public inaugural reception for Governor Sean Parnell and Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell at the Nome Rec. Center Saturday afternoon and a reception by invitation only at Old St. Joseph Hall in the evening.

The Governor and his entourage arrived on the mid-day Alaska Airlines flight and were whisked to a brief tour of the new construction in Nome— the new hospital and public safety buildings.

It was on to the Rec. Center for a whirlwind experience of Native Youth Olympic games, face painting, balloon animals, magic, Jr. Ranger activities, sports, games, arts and crafts, bean bag tosses, a sand box and a bouncing house. The Jr. ROTC presented the colors and children's choirs sang the Alaska Flag song and other choral arrangements.

The Governor wanted an event that expressed family values. He got to mingle with Nomeites and pose for photo ops with children. The Rec. Center event was well attended and participants were treated with free hot dogs.

Next on the agenda was a trip to the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum. Museum Director Laura Samuelson was joined by members of the museum board and the Governor was shown around the cramped quarters that houses one of the state's largest collections of Alaskana and over 18,000 photo images. Parnell was impressed with the displays but did not get a chance to drink out of Wyatt Earp's coffee pot or pet the famed sled dog, Fritz. Parnell expressed the need to work with the legislature to fund a new museum.

Before Parnell and group were on to the next event he took a fast five minutes to talk with The Nugget. (See related story).

The reception at Old St. Joseph Hall was more formal than the Rec Center with hors d'oeuvres, beverages, and fine deserts. The governor, Lt. governor and some commissioners got a chance to mingle and, after thanking folks for their efforts, were off on the evening jet for the return flight to Juneau.

Nutrition guidelines have been updated

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) and the Department of Agriculture recently updated their nutritional guidelines, taking aim at sodium, refined sugars, fats, and refined grains.

It is worth taking a little time to look over the guidelines to see how your current intake of calories and nutrients measures up to the new national standards.

Here are a few of the 23 total recommendations:

· Eat a variety of fruits and vegetables and more of them. Fruits and vegetables are high in healthy sugars. They are also high in fiber, which means in a sense they come with their own toothbrush.

· Restrict consumption of added sugars. The primary sources of added sugar in the American diet are soft drinks (pop), fruit juices, and other sugary beverages. Added sugars are also found in syrups, dressings, and jellies. It is important to remember that ingredients like corn syrup and high fructose corn syrup are also forms of sugar. Limiting these sources of added sugar may be the single best way to raise your HDL (healthy) cholesterol levels.

• Limit daily sodium consumption to less than 2300 mg (a little over a teaspoon of table salt). High-risk groups (e.g., those who are over 50, or who have hypertension, diabetes, or chronic kidney diseases) should consume less than 1500 mg (3/4 teaspoon of table salt). This may be the most important dietary recommendation for preventing high blood pressure.

• Restrict the percentage of calories coming from saturated fats to less than 10 percent. In general saturated fats are solid at room temperature. Examples include butter and fat on red meats. Limit these types of fat in your diet

 Increase the use of clear oils like olive oil and vegetable oil. Use more of these clear oils in cooking rather than shortening.

 Consume less than 300 mg of cholesterol daily. This may be hard to do without reading a lot of labels. However, it is helpful to note cholesterol tends to hide out with saturated fats in most foods. Therefore limiting butter, solid fats in red meat, and oily meats like bacon and sausage will naturally result in a lower consumption of cholesterol.

• Replace white refined grains with whole grains. Try to eat breads made with whole wheat. Look for higher levels of dietary fiber on the label when choosing breads for health.

• If alcohol is consumed, it should be consumed in moderation-up to one drink per day for women and two drinks per day for menand only by adults of legal drinking age. The DHHS is careful to point out that, "it is not recommended that anyone begin drinking or drink more frequently on the basis of potential health benefits" because moderate alcohol intake is associated with an increased risk of health and social problems in certain high risk populations.

Replace some meat and poultry with seafood. Do you still have salmon in the freezer?

· Increase physical activity and reduce time spent in sedentary behav-Remember that weight management comes down to a simple balance of calories. Physical activity burns calories. This is why active people can eat more without gaining weight.

According to the authors of these recommendations, "Eating and physical activity patterns that are focused on consuming fewer calories, making informed food choices, and being physically active can help people attain and maintain a healthy weight, reduce their risk of chronic disease. and promote overall health."

A complete copy of the "Dietary Guidelines for Americans" is available at www.dietaryguidelines.gov.

"When Christians Get it Wrong: Christianity and Science"

By Rev. David Elmore, Community United Methodist Church for the Nome Ministerial Association

How many of you remember seeing the news in July of last year that author Anne Rice had decided to "quit being a Christian." Anne Rice is the author of, among other things, the Interview With a Vampire series of books. Anne Rice announced sometime in 2002 that she had returned to the Catholic Church of her childhood. This is what she had to say about her return to the faith:

'In the moment of surrender, I let go of all the theological or social questions which had kept me from [God] for countless years. I simply let them go. There was the sense, profound and wordless, that if He knew everything I did not have to know everything, and that, in seeking to know everything, I'd been, all of my life, missing the entire point. ... The reason? It was magnificently simple: He knew how or why everything happened."

And so it was with great disappointment that I read this past July that Anne Rice had quit the Church. Anne Rice's Facebook post on the matter was widely reported

"I quit being a Christian. I'm out. In the name of Christ, I refuse to . . . be anti-science. . . . In the name of Christ, I quit Christianity and being Christian. Amen.

She also commented that she remains: "committed to Christ as always but not to being 'Christian' or to being part of Christianity." So, does being Christian really mean one has to be anti-science? Unfortunately, it seems that in many young peoples' minds, it does. Many young people, according to a recent Barna study, view Christianity as being anti-intellectual. This is especially true when Christians try to make all science fit with the Bible.

The Bible contains at least three stories of creation. In Genesis 2. God creates Adam from earth and breathes life into him. Genesis 1 tells of God creating the world in six days. John 1 merely says that Christ was present at creation. But these don't always seem compatible with science. For instance, in 1633, Galileo challenged the Church's teaching that the sun orbited around the earth, for fear the general public would lose faith if the Church continued to insist the Earth was the center of the solar system rather than the sun. Galileo was forced to recant. We have a similar controversy raging today over the issue

Now I think this fear of science disproving the Bible is misplaced. Science cannot disprove the Bible - it is not a science book. The Bible is part of God's self-revelation to us. It's a record of how God has been revealed to humanity throughout history. It is a book of theology. The underlying message celebrated by the Biblical creation stories is not the how the earth was created. It was that the almighty God was in charge of creation. The Bible answers the who and the why. Science tells us the what and the how. Rather than viewing science as threatening our faith, perhaps we should look at the discoveries of science as pointing us towards an infinitely powerful necessity. Yet, we have a very small pool of qualified professionals to address the heating needs of our region. No matter what else you have in your home, a house without heat is not a happy place to live when it's below zero.

In my position at Bering Straits Regional Housing Authority I've seen first-hand the effects that not having an operational heating unit can cause on a house, a family and a community. A no-heat call-out that goes unanswered for even a short while can lead to frozen/burst pipes, which can snowball into extensive damages throughout the home. Emergency work that has to be done on a heating system that is not properly maintained is expensive, inconvenient and just plain unacceptable. However, for the most part, people don't see heating problems until their stove is no longer operating.

This is a major cause for concern. Replacing nearly any oil-fired heating appliance in Nome, and especially the villages, can easily cost several thousand dollars. Plus the price of freight to the home and the added cost of having someone come in to install the unit. In the case of many villages, this means having to add the price of a plane ticket to the hourly rate of your heating professional.

Oil heat is the primary (and often only) fuel used in nearly all homes in this region. It's comparatively cheap, it provides a good amount of B.T.Us, it can be quite efficient, there is a steady infrastructure in place for the transport and storage of fuel, etc.

That being said, we saw in recent years the price of oil skyrocket to around $8 a gallon in some parts of the region, and as the world's oil supply gets used, that price is only going to increase. There are a number of things that can be done to improve the efficiency and life expectancy of existing systems to extend their longevity as well.

By nature, "rodding boilers", "scrubbing stacks" and handling the chemicals used to clean the water side of a boiler are dirty and time consuming jobs. A properly equipped heating professional can take most of the mess and a considerable chunk of the time portion out of this kind of job. Also, when a professional does this kind of job, they can easily see when and if problems are occurring before you have a middle of the night emergency.

First off, there are of course two sides to a boiler, the fire side (where the soot builds up) and the water side (where sediments and other contaminants in the water/glycol mixture builds up).

1. Cleaning the soot accumulation in the heating appliance and its stack can greatly improve the efficiency of your appliance because soot is one of the best insulators known to man.

2. Cleaning the scale buildup on the water side of the boiler will also greatly increase the efficiency of the system and produce substantial energy savings.

Not only will these two items make for immediate savings by lowering the fuel usage of your heating appliance, but they will also pay for themselves by increasing the useful life span of the boiler and allow it to be in use for the warranty period of the system and beyond.

A majority of the time, people with heat problems have two choices: either they call upon their friends/relatives who start changing parts out without having enough knowledge to properly diagnose the problem the first time; or, they try to call a plumber, who is often busy, expensive and overqualified for the task at hand.

Therefore, I see a great need for our region to develop a program whereby we can train heating professionals to maintain existing boiler systems and have the credentials to be qualified installers of new heating systems when necessary.

The training necessary to become a heating professional is fairly minimal, but has opportunities for expansion. With one week's training you can receive your certificate of fitness proving you are aware of the use and operation of the safety devices in various systems (an important tool for people new to the profession, and often a necessity for insurance purposes).

Proprietary training on, say, Monitor or Toyotomi products (the two most common direct venting electronic drip stoves in our region) for example can also be done in about a week's time as well and they provide the tips and tricks of diagnosing common problems with particular systems as well as service manuals for the systems you are likely to have in the area. More importantly, the trainer provides you with information about finding replacement parts and is an important source for networking connections with other business professionals in the field that you can call upon for assistance in your career as a heating professional.

There are also several heating certification bodies that are available to train professionals, such as NATE (the North American Technician Excellence) for not only heat, but also ventilation and air conditioning (and in many homes throughout Alaska ventilation is as much of a problem as heating), as well as NORA (the National Oil Heat Research Alliance). Both NATE and NORA offer training courses online, as well as continuing education training. They also provide information about new innovations in the field and professional reviews of the performance of the items.

The basic training courses for heating professionals will provide valuable job skills and opportunities. The skills necessary for a boiler man are readily transferrable to those of a plumber (pipe fitting and soldering, etc.), an electrician (diagnosing low-voltage wiring, troubleshooting controller problems, wiring pumps, controls and guns) and a HVAC technician (increasing numbers of new homes use HRV units to expel the moisture from within a home and they're often in the boiler room).

The tools required for this trade are not entirely cost prohibitive either... They are the basic staples of the plumbing trade (soldering supplies, pipe wrenches, pliers, screwdrivers, cutters for copper and black iron, a pipe threader, and just a handful of other tools), personal protective clothing (i.e. disposable suit & booties, chemical resistant gloves, and a respirator) plus perhaps a soot vacuum, boiler/stack brushes, a Bacharach tester, and a voltage meter.

In conclusion, there is a definite need for heating professionals in our region. Remember, every occupied building in this region has a heating source: whether it's an oil-oil fired boiler, direct-vented monitor type appliance, forced air ducted system, or even a wood stove. A boiler technician has the potential to provide services to all of these heat sources.

This is a career path that provides opportunities for young people to learn a valuable, honest trade and take their skills back to their home village with pride. Technical expertise of any kind is valuable, but the practical application of technical expertise of local people used to create village based job opportunities and solve local problems is priceless.

Arctic sea ice hits historic winter low

The National Snow and Ice Data Center reports that the extent of Arctic sea ice for January 2011 was the lowest ever in the satellite record for that month. In January 2011, Arctic sea-ice extent averaged just 5.23 million square miles, the lowest January ice extent since satellite records began in 1979. Air temperatures over much of the Arctic were 4 to 11 degrees Fahrenheit above normal in

According to the Data Center, January's sea-ice extent was 19,300 square miles below the record low of 5.25 million square miles set in 2006, and 490,000 square miles below the 1979 to 2000 average 9 percent decline. Regional ice growth has been particularly slow compared to past years.

Hudson Bay did not completely freeze up until mid-January, about a month later than normal according to Canadian Ice Service analyses. The Labrador Sea region is still largely free of ice, except in protected bays along the coast. Normally at this time of year, ice extends a few hundred kilometers from the coast all the way from Hudson Strait to Newfoundland. In January researchers at the U.S. Geological Survey in Alaska reported they had tracked a female polar bear's record nine-day swim to reach an ice floe 426 miles offshore. The bear lost 22 percent of her body weight and lost her year-old cub.

Dear Editor

I am writing as a concerned citizen of Unalakleet with the intention of getting our elected officials' attention. We have a couple of young men beating people up. It has happened on more occasions then it should have without punishment towards the individuals, both from police and troopers. What type of message are we sending to our young people here? Is it okay to beat up people and send them to hospital fro broken bones and faces and not be punished? Parents. where is your discipline for these individuals? Everyone knows these individuals are who are doing the beatings.

I know the City, UNC, Tribal Office as well as the school and concerned citizens met on this a few months back. Hey, if these two haven't been stopped, you said "We will stop this." Where are your actions to stop this!

I believe it is time to Blue Ticket these two individuals out of here, especially the one without family ties here. He is the one that seems to never get caught and his "friends get thrown under the bus" to cover for People of Unalakleet, please be careful around these two individuals. You know who I am talking about.

Thank you, Jimmy Johnson Unalakleet, AK

To all,

Just thought I'd drop a few notes in the paper. It's been a year since we got lost in a sudden ground storm traveling from Savoonga to Gambell. We are grateful to be here with our children, family and friends. We are very grateful for the search and rescue teams who braved sub-zero temperatures to look for us. We were out there two days, two nights with wind chills of 60 to 70 below zero. Windy the whole time! But we were lucky with my husband only losing half his foot and half a ring finger and with me a scar on my chin.

Love for each other kept us alive and especially love for our children, whom we thought of the whole time we were out there. We did not even get angry towards each other or argue out there. We pushed each other, thinking we would soon find a camp to warm up in, but visibility was the problem. We couldn't see more than a few feet from us.

That night when we left Savoonga it was a crystal clear until we got into the mountains. It got a little hard to see, but you can still see the trail markers. We got past the mountains and it got clear again. We passed a snowmachine with no one on or around it, went on and saw someone flashing lights. He was a family friend of my husband. He was on his way to the nearest camp and we gave him a ride. It was a slow ride and our snowmachine shocks were pretty shot riding three on it. He was on his way to Savoonga from Gambell. We made the choice to keep going to Gambell because of the blowing snow in the mountains and because my husband's buddy just came back from

The way to Gambell is good. It only took us minutes to get to the halfway point, still clear. We passed the camps just behind Gambell mountain; then again blowing snow. It gets hard to see again, so we turn around to get back to the camp, but we can't see one trail marker. The ground storm gets worse, it was as if we were being covered with a blanket. We keep looking for a trail marker. We had plenty of gas in the tank so we rode on a little more looking. I guess the storm was just beginning from Gambell onto the whole island that night just as we were to arrive in Gambell. We saw rocks, big rocks, like the rocks on top of Gambell Mountain. Soon no rocks, just hard snow beneath us. My husband gets off and walks a little ways away but runs back. He says "I think we're on the ice cause it's cracking!" Made me sick but I sure felt movement when we stopped the snowmachine!

My husband keeps asking me, "Which way to go?" but I'm clueless too. But I noticed the stars and I point to that direction, "That way!" We finally get on a trail and the gas runs out. We have no clue where we are. It was pure darkness for a while, then the stars got brighter. We use the snowmachine as a wind shield/shelter. It was tough not to fall asleep that night, but we kept calling out to each others, even just to say "I love you, are you OK? Let's get up and stretch." It was sort of bizarre for me because we usually argue or get mad at each other at least once a day. The whole time out there, not one time - no negativity. My Mom always said "God is love and evil is afraid of God.' Sometimes especially now (cold out), we look back and ask each other, "How did we make it?" Love kept us alive. My husband's Dad use to tell everyone, "You put a bomb in between them and let it go off, they'd still be holding to each

Anyways, we are just so grateful for those men who found us and the

EPA to study mining impacts on Bristol

The Environmental Protection Agency decided to assess potential impacts of mining and other development projects on the Bristol Bay watershed. Last year, tribal councils in Nondalton, Koliganik, New Stuyahok, Ekwok, Dillingham and Levelok asked top officials in the federal Environmental Protection Agency to invoke the so-called 404 section of the Clean Water Act in the Nushagak and Kvichak river drainages to block Pebble Mine development. The Pebble Partnership has not applied for permits yet. EPA administrator Lisa Jackson said the agency was commissioning further study of the region.

Redistricting Update

I have been working closely with other legislators who share my district boundaries. At this point, we can only rely on projected populations from 2009 until the census information of 2010 is released in April. My staff has been involved with the Bush Caucus and continues to plan the new redistricting boundaries to submit to the Redistricting Board. Many legislators and myself agree that the new boundaries should reflect cultural and regional factors including other variables such as school districts, tribal languages, and energy viability. It appears that because Ballot Measure #1 did not pass last year to expand the Legislature, rural Alaska will be losing some representation. Regardless, I will continue working hard to make certain our district is adequately considered in statewide policy making decisions.

Permanent Fund Dividend

It is that time of year again to apply for the Permanent Fund Dividend. The application deadline is March 31, 2011. The PFDs are very helpful in offsetting the high cost of living in rural areas. You may file online at http://www.pfd.state.ak.us/. If you have any questions or need to appeal to the department, the toll free number for the Permanent Dividend Division is 1-800-733-8813.

sponded to the EPA's proposal with nod and said that she is committed to letting the science decide whether mining is right for the Bristol Bay region. Murkowski said that Bristol Bay is also home to the world's biggest salmon fishery, and it is because of the fishery's importance to the state's economy and the traditional subsistence activities of local residents that she has reserved judgment on whether mining should occur until the environmental assessment is completed. Senator Mark Begich said that he hopes for a fully transparent process, which invites all sides to the table and involves all the affected stakeholders including fishing groups, tribes, Alaska Native Corporations and local communities. "I also want to ensure this is a thorough and robust vetting of the issues involved and not just a bureaucratic exercise," Begich said.

$2.6 million needed from savings to balance City budget

Council may reset meeting schedule to Wednesdays at 5:30 p.m.

By Laurie McNicholas

Councilman Stan Andersen said amendments to the FY11 General Fund Municipal Budget approved by the Nome Common Council on Monday added $850,000 to the fund balance, increasing the budget deficit from -$1.7 million to -$2.6 million. He said the city will tap into its savings account to balance the budget. However, the bottom line of the general fund budget with amendments presented to the council for approval on Monday reads: $1,724,382.28-.

During a council work session on proposed FY11 budget amendments on Feb. 10, Andersen and City Controller Cussy Kauer disagreed over the fund balance figure and issues related to other budget figures she presented to the council. Andersen said he would sit with Kauer after the meeting and get his own figures.

Andersen pointed out increases in the general fund budget of $650,000 for a cost overrun on construction of the new Public Safety Building and $100,000 for employment security. Workers employed by the city to construct the Public Safety Building filed unemployment compensation claims after the building was completed, Kauer explained at the council work session on Feb. 10. On Monday Councilman Randy Pomeranz said the original budget for construction of the Public Safety Building came from 2007, so no inflation was allowed for. He said with the use of force accounting for the project, 50 percent of funds expended had been put back into the community in one way or another.

Andersen drew attention to FY11 general fund budget amendments

School Board unanimously approves 55 contracts

By Lori Head

Nome's Board of Education gave Superintendent Jon Wehde the green light to offer contracts to the 53 tenured and non-tenured teachers recommended by the principals of the Nome Elementary and Jr/Sr High School, as well as two salaried staff for the 2011-2012 school year. Those contracts are due back on March 11, allowing the teachers and staff a 30-day period to decide if they will return to the halls of Nome Public Schools. This might be an excellent time to fix a favorite teacher or two a delicious dessert or send a note of appreciation.

Other important actions included the approval of business office computer program upgrades for a total cost estimate of $60,962 over 5 years and an FY11 Winter Budget Revision presented at a January board meeting. Superintendent

Wehde explained that the computer program upgrades are necessary and will completely rehabilitate the business office. A 90 percent Reading Goal Resolution that would include adopting the goal of 90 percent of end of school year third graders

My name is Tiko Crofoot. My parents, my sister, and I have been Alaska residents for many years now. I am active duty military currently stationed in Virginia and am getting ready for my fifth deployment to CENTCOM as a US Navy SEAL. For the past two years, I was denied my Permanent Fund Dividend because of a clause stating that an absence from the state of 10 years, even if due to military requirements and even if you have maintained residency the entire time, negates eligibility.

I have gone back to Alaska every year since being in the military and have spent the requisite amount of time there to qualify for the PFD and to retain my residency. I have an Alaska driver's license, vote in all Alask elections, have it listed as my home of record for the military, and plan to retire there once my military service is complete.

Prior to two years ago, the PFD recognized my absence from the state as legitimate due to my military service and honored my applications for the PFD. Two years ago was my tenth year in the military and therefore resulted in the PFD denial. The state of Alaska has always been supportive of its military constituents and honored their service. However, this ruling by the Permanent Fund seems in direct contradiction to any intent that the clause may have originally had.

I have always been proud of my military service, and have, until now, felt as though the state of Alaska supported its military members.

I do not believe that Alaska should deny its military service members the PFD because they are obligated to other states and overseas in order to protect this country. I would imagine that many Alaska residents who have chosen to serve in the military and are stationed outside the state have encountered this issue.

I believe that a change to the PFD clause denying us our Permanent Fund would go a long way to show the support Alaska has for its military men and women.

Additionally, I find it ironic that for senators and representatives who serve their nation outside the state, the PFD waives this "10-year" clause. It allows members of Congress to continue receiving their dividends even though they are out of state as frequently as its military

Legislature contemplates oil tax overhaul

Last week the House Resources Committee held hearings on Governor Sean Parnell's proposed oil tax adjustments. The governor's proposal aims to spur private-sector investment, stem the decline in oil production and create jobs by restructuring taxes on oil production. Parnell warned that Alaska is close to slipping from being the country's second largest oil producing state to its fourth largest. He proposes tax credits for drilling new wells; a lower base tax rate for exploration areas outside of existing fields; a cap on production taxes at 50 percent. This, critics said, would result in less revenue for the state of Alaska.

Moving through the House were several bills including a resolution to oppose ANWR's proposed wilderness designation. Anchorage Republican Charisse Millett championed the resolution which urges the US Congress to refrain from passing legislation that designates land in Area 1002 of the Arctic National Wildlife Reserve. Also passed through the house was HB 21 that will increase the number of members appointed to the statewide suicide prevention council from 16 members to 17 members and create an age requirement for the youth member. The additional member would be appointed by the governor and would give representation on the council for members of the military.

Senator Hollis French and Rep. Les Gara introduced a bill that would provide state grants to bridge the gap between what Medicare pays and what it costs a physician to see a patient in Alaska. The gap is often so large, they say, that many doctors are turning away elderly patients. Rep. Les Gara and Rep. Scott Kawasaki introduced the companion bill House Bill 152 during the House floor session.

The Senate passed a bill dealing with clarifications of the state law for counting write-in votes. The bill says a write-in vote is valid even if a voter misspells a candidate's name. In last year's US Senate race, the issue arose as tea-party backed candidate Joe Miller challenged Lisa Murkowski's victory as a write-in candidate. Miller sued over the state's handling of the election. Three courts refused to overturn results favoring Murkowski, though a federal judge called Alaska's write-in law "poorly drafted." The bill goes to the House, where Republican Rep. Bob Lynn, chair of the House State Affairs Committee, has said he wants to wait with moving legislation related to election changes until the state releases an internal review of its handling of the race. That report is due by March 4.

Noorvik man sentenced to 50 years in prison

A Kotzebue Judge handed down a 60-year sentence, with 10 years suspended, to Ronald Barr Jr., 51 of Noorvik, guilty of one count of sexual assault in the first degree and one count of assault in the first degree. Barr was arrested for sexually assaulting and beating a family member over the duration of a few days late last March. Barr was convicted of the crimes in August 2010. Prior to the March attack, he was convicted of sexual abuse of a minor and assault.

Budget cuts target Public radio, EPA

Several bills before Congress are aiming to eliminate the Corporation for Public Broadcasting. CPB is a private, nonprofit corporation created by Congress in 1967 to be the steward of the federal government's investment in public broadcasting. It helps support the operations of more than 1,000 locally owned and operated public television and radio stations nationwide. Many new members to Congress have run on the platform of reigning in the country's budget deficit. The New York Times reports that the spending bill, put forward by the Appropriations Committee for consideration on the floor this week, proposes slashing a wide array of domestic programs and foreign aid. It blocks the spending of about $2 billion in unused economic stimulus money and seeks to prevent the Internal Revenue Service from enforcing the new health care law. The measure also cuts financing directly from the office of the president. The bill also plans to cut the budget for the Environmental Protection Agency by $3 billion — an almost 30 percent cut from current levels. The measure would also block the agency from implementing new emissions regulations, and it would cut more than $100 million in spending on climate change programs.

Yukon Quest champion scratches

Ten days into the 1,000-mile long Yukon Quest sled dog race from Whitehorse to Fairbanks, eight mushers have scratched, including former YQ champion Hans Gatt. One was withdrawn for accepting outside help when she was low on food during the long stretch between Pelly's Crossing and Dawson. Most of the race, Hugh Neff was leading the field of 25 mushers. But as of Monday, the Tok musher lost his lead when his team turned around on Eagle Summit. Ken Anderson reports that he led his own team and Neff's team up the summit, but then Neff turned around. On Saturday, one dog in Brent Sass's team, his wheel dog Taco, died. The officials were informed by the veterinary team at Slaven's Roadhouse. Head veterinarian Al Hallman said a necropsy was conducted but revealed no obvious disease processes or signs of trauma.

In the run between Circle and Central, Hans Gatt had to get rescued by fellow musher Sebastian Schnuelle. En route to Central, Gatt and his entire team fell through the ice into chest-deep overflow. Schnuelle helped Gatt's dogs out of the water, recovered Gatt's sled and assisted the hypothermic musher. Schnuelle made a fire, took off Gatt's soaked boots and jerry-rigged new boots for him out of dog blankets with burlap bags over top, tied down by neck lines and tug lines. The dogs dried by rolling in the snow. After about an hour beside the fire, they continued into Central. Gatt arrived into Central and scratched.

that added $100,000 for a 20-by-40-foot warm storage addition at the Nome Recreation Center and $38,300 for a new dog pound at the Public Safety Building. He also noted an amendment showing the city saved $37,000 on the purchase of a dump truck budgeted at $235,000 that cost $198,000.

Andersen won council approval for three budget amendments he proposed on Monday. The council unanimously adopted Andersen's motion to donate $5,000 to the Nome-Golovin Snowmobile Race, and to increase the amount of an amendment for a vehicle for the Nome Police Dept. from $40,000 to $50,000. The council approved Andersen's motion to add $60,000 to the budget for a new Suburban for the city by a 4-1 vote, with Councilman Jim West voting no. Mayor Denise Michels had recommended replacing the Suburban in her report to the council. She said it shimmies in 4-wheel drive, the second row passenger door won't open, the CB radio had to be disconnected because it drains the battery, and the heater fan makes a loud noise. The council approved the motion by a 4-1 vote, with Councilman Jim West voting against it.

Andersen attempted without success to amend the general fund budget to contribute $20,000 to the Nome Emergency Shelter Team in response to a letter from NEST requesting the funds. Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked how much money the council already had approved for NEST this fiscal year. "$10,000," said Andersen. "So $30,000 total?" asked West. "Yes," replied Andersen. Knodel, Councilwoman Josie Stiles and West voted no; Andersen and Pomeranz voted yes

Among other general fund budget amendments approved by the council were $45,000 for Nome Joint Utility System to supplement the city's $100,000 community benefit share from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. that will be used to replace all of the city's street lights with LEDs; $15,000 for the Bering Sea Women's Group, and $5,000 for the Iron Dog Snowmobile Race.

The ordinance to amend the general fund budget was approved by a 4-1 vote, with West voting no. The council unanimously approved ordinances to amend the city's FY11 Capital Projects Fund Budget, FY11 Special Revenue Fund Budget, FY11 Port of Nome Fund Budget and FY11 Capital Projects Fund Budget.

Meeting time may change

During a public comment period, Utility Manager John Handeland suggested that the council begin its regular meetings at 8 p.m., the time that council meetings began when he was a kid, or at 5:30 p.m. He said the school board has met at 5:30 p.m. for years and gets public participation

"I'd be happy to change the day to Wednesday," said Andersen. "I hate Mondays."

"It's hard to get people to a local government meeting at 7:30," said Michels.

"5:30 is early for people who work until 5," noted Pomeranz. However, he said he is willing to attend council meetings at that time.

Andersen asked staff to prepare an long serving Rotarian and former manager of Radio Station KNOM, with a memorial at the park.

The council approved an ordinance to amend an ordinance that specifies exceptions to the hours of sale of alcoholic beverages within the city—NCO Section 3.05.040(c). The amended ordinance deletes the words "in January" from the following sentence. "On the Sunday of the Bering Sea Open Golf tournament and on the Sunday in January known as 'Super Bowl Sunday,' liquor establishments described in subsection (b) of this section are authorized to ordinance to amend the day and time for regular council meetings to Wednesday at 5:30 and place the ordinance on the agenda for first reading at the next regular council meeting.

The amended ordinance also permits the sale of intoxicating beverages on a day on which a statewide election is held for the purpose of voting for a candidate for public office. The amended ordinance states: "The provisions of AS 04.16.070(a) do not apply within the limits of the city when elections are being held."

Causeway lighting project

City Manager Josie Bahnke said she anticipates that the Denali Commission will grant $666,509 to the city for a high mast lighting project on the Nome Causeway. The total project cost will be $833,136, she added. Bahnke said she submitted a grant application for the project to the commission last November, and the commission's Transportation Advisory Committee ranked the proposal at a high level among waterfront development projects at a meeting in mid-January. She said the project will include installation of two high mast lights and is scheduled for construction this summer.

Other council actions

The council heard first reading of an ordinance authorizing the disposal of municipal property by use permit to the Nome Rotary Club for the East End Park and scheduled the ordinance for second reading, a public hearing and final action at the next regular meeting.

The Rotary Club plans to create a scenic walking path around the main pond at the park, construct a walking path from the pavilion area to the water's edge, build a platform for bird watching, and improve and maintain the park's recreational facilities. Ideas for a playground and winter activities at the site are being considered. The Rotary Club also wants to honor the late Tom Busch, a open at 10 a.m."

The amended ordinance also permits the sale of intoxicating beverages on a day on which a statewide election is held for the purpose of voting for a candidate for public office. The amended ordinance states: "The provisions of AS 04.16.070(a) do not apply within the limits of the city when elections are being held."

The council approved a resolution of appreciation and gratitude to Nome Eskimo Community for generous support for the community of Nome. NES contributed funds through the Tribal Transportation Program for road maintenance in Nome in the amounts of $100,000 in 2009, $60,000 in 2010 and $50,000 in 2011

The council adopted a resolution awarding the contract for the Nome Recreation Center gymnasium ceiling upgrade project to Eklutna Service, LLC for the total base bid of $173,198. Eklutna Service submitted the lowest of six bids received for the project. The city has hired NorthWind Architects and RSA Engineering to design the upgrade, administer the contract and manage construction of the project.

The council approved Bahnke's request to waive the fee for use of Old St. Joe's Hall for an inaugural reception for Gov. Sean Parnell and Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell. Bahnke reserved the hall from Jan. 31 through Feb. 6 to clean it and prepare for the event. The value of the fee waiver is $1,750.

Project updates

Bahnke summarized the status of several construction activities as follows: The building maintenance staff is renovating the bowling alley at the Nome Recreation Center. Tom Schemm and his crew will arrive in Nome this week to repair bowling equipment and provide training to NRC staff. Electrical upgrades are under way at the NRC. The contractor is installing new emergency lighting, running conduit and changing lights and panels in the boiler room.

The boiler replacement project at Nome Elementary School is nearing completion, with a few items to be finished in the week of March 14 prior to final inspection. The roof replacement project for Buildings D and E on the Nome-Beltz High School campus is being closed out.

Energy efficiency upgrades and capital improvement planning for city facilities are under discussion with John Blees, the city's new engineer

Staff changes and recruitment

Bahnke said Kauer has submitted her resignation after 36 years of service to the city. An effective date for the resignation has not been set, but the recruitment process for a finance director will begin in a few weeks, she added.

Knodel said the council has talked about hiring a chief financial officer instead of a finance director and she would like to find out which position would be better for the city before recruitment begins.

Bahnke said Cheryl Thompson is the new museum assistant at Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum, Alex Morgan has been promoted to building maintenance worker, and Shynne Stott has replaced Morgan as a laborer in the Public Works Dept.

reading at or above grade level by the year 2014 was tabled for further discussion and revision at a special meeting to follow the February 22 work session.

Meeting with City Council regarding superintendent evaluation

During Board Members' Open Discussion, Barb Nickels asked where they were at regarding the meeting with the City. Board President Gloria Karmun replied that she had received a call from the mayor and that there would not be a meeting. Instead, a letter would be drafted from the City and once received, be placed in the next board packet. Karmun continued, "They decided that it's not necessary to meet because we're a separate entity from the City of Nome and they'd want to delve into our business or give us direction." Board Member Betsy Brennan said she'd welcome a meeting with the City Council as an open discussion or work session as it aligned with one of the board's main goals to have a great working relationship with the City Council.

Paraprofessional aides

Moving on to another topic, Brennan expressed an interest in reviewing the pay scale for teacher aides (paraprofessionals). Currently, the district hires several different types of aides. One is the Intensive Special Education Aide which spends one-on-one time with special education students, another is a Title 1 Aide which starts at $18.96 per hour but has education requirements, and one titled Paraprofessional Aide which is a classroom teacher aide and has one entry level pay of $15.43 an hour plus benefits. Brennan is targeting the Paraprofessional Aide's pay scale and suggested exploring the possibility of two or three entry levels of pay depending on education and experience to potentially attract quality people. After board discussion, Superintendent Wehde was asked to pursue this and accepted the task with enthusiasm.

January Students of the Month

Oliver Hoogendorn was announced by Carmen Russo, NBHS vice principal, as the Jr. High Student of the Month. He is the son of Brenna Outwater and Willie and Bridie Hoogendorn. Oliver was commended for his dedication and commitment to the sports he plays, as well as being a genuinely nice young man to be around. Tim Sullivan, son of Dan and Janeen Sullivan, was honored as the High School's Student of the Month. Tim is a senior this year and, according to his nominator, deserving because of his leadership in the classroom and on the court. It was also noted that he is a very positive young man and always polite. Anvil City Science Academy's Student of the month is Lacy Erickson. She is the daughter of Mitch and Vicky Erickson. Lacy was selected for academic growth, her involvement and leadership in ACTION, and her positive attitude. Congratulations to all.

ASVAB, FAFSA, JROTC and NNYLO

Nivi Brandt, the student representative, reported that students have taken the ASVAB (Armed Services Vocational Aptitude Battery) test and that the FAFSA (Free Application for Federal Student Aid) is due this month. She also mentioned that the Nome Native Youth Leadership Organization plans to paint murals for the Nanook Room and have them put up by the end of the school year. Her report also highlighted an awards night in January for JROTC that had a good turnout, the JROTC Poker Shoot and boys and girls basketball games.

Parent communication survey, APEX, The Wolverine Gazette

Steve Gast, NBHS Principal, followed by saying, "...lots of good things going on." He summarized the remaining school months as Testing and Survey Season. Students have several important tests over the next few months. Two surveys can be found on the school's website, www.nomeschools.com. One is a School Climate and Connectedness Survey which is a Student Survey and is separated according to which school the student attends. The other is the Nome Public Schools Parent Communication Survey. This will be announced during the third quarter progress mailing report but can be taken online now at the school's website. It is a quick, 15 question survey to assess the preferred methods of school information sent to homes. There will also be a paper survey sent home to parents since all may not have access to the online survey.

Gast also reported that he has 10 students actively working on APEX credit recovery classes and ELL tutoring will start in February. The activity bus is running every night after school and planning continues for next year's school class schedule grid. One new idea being entertained, possibly as an elective, would be to have Beltz students go to the Elementary School and work on the 90 percent Reading Goal with the students.

Dave Keller, Elementary School Principal, handed out Issue 1 of The Wolverine Gazette, which will also be sent home to parents, and he pledged to publish future, monthly issues. He looks forward to including more student contributions as well as announcements of upcoming events of interest. Mr. Keller also asked board members to consider the possibility of an early release program similar to one utilized by the Kennewick School District in order to free up time for teachers to align their instructional activities. However, he was not recommending that move at this time because he recognizes the time would be taken from student instruction which is another key component for student achievement.

Superintendent search

The Superintendent Search has begun as Association of Alaska School Boards (AASB) has been contacted and a timeline is in place. March 7 is the application deadline and March 22-24 should see the final candidates interviewing in Nome. Currently the board has received two applications and according to Board President Karmun a lot of retired folks" are interested if the position changed from Superintendent to CEO. Board Member Brennan said she thought that a discussion had already taken place where it was decided changing the title to CEO would not be the direction the board would want to pursue. It was decided that they would discuss this with Joseph Reeves, AASB's Associate Executive Director, via a work session this month. Later in the meeting Board Member Nickels read a letter from Joel Alowa that offered vet another alternative: "I ask the NPS Board of Education to reconsider its decision in retaining Mr. Wehde. If you are unable to do so due to policy or procedure, please encourage him to reapply for the position and strongly support and consider him to continue as the NPS superintendent."

Superintendent report

Superintendent Jon Wehde commended Mr. Gast for the successful launch of the APEX learning program at Beltz. He also mentioned the resurgence of Career and Technical Education and support Governor Sean Parnell has extended to the program. He believes CTE serves to counter students dropping out by promoting student engagement which then increases their options for success in post-secondary life.

Wehde also thanked Nome Eskimo Community for their support in sharing the expense of the "afterschool bus" and the City of Nome and City Council for Jr. High students in the pool as part of their PE classes with City pool staff attending. He concluded his report, "Nome Public Schools is the listening place so keep your comments coming and attend the NPS public meetings where your thoughts are welcome."

The Nome Board of Education will meet again on February 22 at 5:30 p.m. in the Elementary School Library.

• Feds target salmon bycatch in Bering Sea pollock fishery

the NPFMC, and Nicole Kimball, staff for the council's rural community outreach committee will participate in a panel discussion at the forum and be at a table to answer questions for the rest of the day.

The National Marine Fisheries Service manages all species of Pacific salmon as prohibited species in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. Most of the salmon incidentally caught in the fishery are returned dead to the sea. The council is considering alternatives for a chum bycatch management plan that include triggered closures of pollock fishing areas and chum bycatch hard caps ranging from 50,000 to 353,000 fish, according to the Bering Sea Non-Chinook Salmon Bycatch Management Preliminary Draft Environmental Assessment recently posted on the council's website. Chum salmon comprise nearly all of the non-Chinook salmon bycatch taken in the pollock fishery.

The council plans to select a preferred preliminary alternative for the non-Chinook salmon bycatch management plan at a meeting to begin June 6 in Nome. Several hundred persons are expected to attend the meeting, reports Mike Cavin, director of the Nome Visitors and Convention Bureau. The council will take public testimony at the meeting prior to selecting the PPA.

Extremely high bycatch numbers for Chinook salmon and for non-Chinook salmon occurred in the Bering Sea pollock fishery during the past decade, prompting the council to develop separate bycatch management plans for Chinook salmon and chum salmon. A fishery management plan to reduce Chinook bycatch was approved by the council in April 2009 and took effect last month with opening of the 2011 Bering Sea pollock fishery.

The American Fisheries Act of 1998 identified the vessels and processors eligible to participate in the Bering Sea pollock fishery and allocated specific percentages of the total allowable catch among three competing sectors of the fishery. The National Marine Fisheries Service annually allocates portions of the total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock to the inshore catcher vessel sector, catcher/processor sector and mothership sector after allocating 10 percent of the pollock TAC to the Community Development Quota Program and making allocations for incidental catch allowances.

NMFS allocates 50 percent of the remaining TAC to the catcher vessel sector, 40 percent to the catcher/processor sector and 10 percent to the mothership sector. The Bering Sea pollock TAC is divided between the A season (Jan. 20-June 10) and the B season (June 10-Nov. 1). The fleet typically targets roebearing females in the A season and harvests pollock for filet and surimi products in the B season.

Ten pollock fishing cooperatives were formed as a result of the American Fisheries Act-seven shoreside catcher vessels cooperatives, two offshore catcher/processor cooperatives and one mothership cooperative.

Shoreside catcher vessels deliver pollock to shorebased processors; catcher/processors harvest and process pollock on the same vessel; and catcher vessels in the mothership sector deliver pollock to motherships, which are processing vessels.

Bycatch of non-Chinook salmon in the pollock fishery takes place almost exclusively in the B season, according to the Bering Sea Non-Chinook Salmon Bycatch Management Preliminary Draft Environmental Assessment. The assessment provides chum salmon bycatch figures by sector in the pollock fishery from 1997 through 2009 (pp. 239-240). The years of highest bycatch in that period were 2004 (440,459 chums); 2005 (704,586 chums); and 2006 (309,644 chums).

The shoreside catcher vessel fleet took 78 percent of the 2004 bycatch, 88 percent of the 2005 bycatch and 93 percent of the 2006 chum bycatch. The catcher/processor sector took 17 percent of total chum bycatch in 2004, 9 percent in 2005 and 6 percent in 2006. The mothership sector accounted for 3 percent of chum bycatch in 2004, 2 percent in 2005 and 1 percent in 2006. CDQ bycatch figures are not included in sector totals.

Chum bycatch in the pollock fish-2008; 46,129 in 2009, and 13,306 in sector took 58 percent of the chum in 2008 and 86 percent in 2009. The preliminary draft assessment does not include a percent of chum by-erv has declined in recent years, totaling 93,786 fish in 2007; 15,142 in 2010. The shoreside catcher vessel salmon bycatch in 2007; 83 percent catch by sector for 2010.

Chinook salmon bycatch

The Bering Sea Chinook Salmon Bycatch Management Final Environmental Impact Statement issued in December 2009 said the shoreside catcher vessel fleet consistently had the highest Chinook by catch by sector in the A season since 2002, but prior to that the offshore catcher/processor catch was higher on a seasonal basis (p. 311).

The highest Chinook salmon bycatch figures recorded from 1992 through 2010 were 67,361 fish in 2005, 82,696 fish in 2006, and 121,758 fish in 2007. The percent of total bycatch taken by the sectors were: 2005 - shoreside 72.4 percent, catcher-processor 23.2 percent, and mothership 4.4 percent; 2006catcher/processor 22.7 mother ship 6.7 percent; and 2007 shoreside 63.4 percent, catcherprocessor 28.9 percent, and mothership 7.7 percent. Chinook bycatch dropped sharply after 2007, totaling 21,500 fish in 2008 and 12,424 fish in 2009.

"Variation in the total number of Chinook salmon taken each year, and in the seasonal and sector distribution of that catch, is significant," stated the Chinook salmon bycatch management EIS. "The unpredictability of Chinook salmon encounters in the pollock fishery results from the current lack of understanding of the biological and oceanographic conditions that result in these encounters.... The causes of the decline in Chinook salmon bycatch in 2008 and 2009 are unknown but most likely are a result of a combination of factors including changes in Chinook salmon and pollock abundance and distribution, and changes in fleet behavior to avoid bycatch." (pp. ES-4, ES-5). The Chinook salmon bycatch totaled 9.735 fish in 2010.

Bering Sea Issues Forum

In addition to chum salmon bycatch issues in the pollock fishery, the Bering Sea Issues Forum scheduled Feb. 23 from 10 a.m. to noon at the Nome Recreation Center will focus on marine protected areas, national ocean policy, a port access route study, and the Endangered Species Act in relation to ice seals and walruses. Forum panelists in addition to Kimball and Oliver of the NPFMC will be Michelle Ridgeway, marine scientist, a member of the Marine Protected Area Federal Advisory Committee; Kathryn Mengerink, oceans program director, Environmental Law Institute; Joel Casto, tribal liaison, U.S. Coast Guard; Barbara Mahoney, biologist, National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration: and James Mac-Cracken, biologist, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. The panel moderator will be Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, anthropologist, Kawerak,

Dropouts, it's time to "drop in"

By Lori Head

"Call me." That is Steve Gast's answer to the question, "If I'm a high school dropout who needs a few credits to complete my degree, what should I do?" Mr. Gast. NBHS Principal, has already captured 10 current high school students falling behind the credit requirements as well. He explains, "Obviously the issue of dropouts is a global issue. I mean, all across the United States it's an issue. But I was more specifically interested in what it is in Nome, here, that is creating the issue. And it wasn't the HSGQE state qualifying test. Our kids were passing that. We were losing kids that had already passed that test, but were falling behind credit-wise and they didn't see the light at the end of the tunnel and a way to pick up that credit to graduate in a reasonable length of

Enter APEX Learning digital curriculum. Each semester course offers 70-90 hours of interactive direct instruction, guided practice, and integrated formative, summative, and diagnostic assessment. Just launched on January 10, the program today is a roving cart of laptops that during the last two periods of school are accessed by a total of 10 NBHS students who log in and learn. There is also a 3-4 p.m. block, and a 4-5 p.m. block. Then an activity bus leaves campus at 5:05 p.m. APEX also has one student participating from the Nome

By the end of March, Gast hopes to have a furnished room at Beltz HS dedicated to APEX with 15 student workstations and one teacher workstation. The computers have already been ordered.

By start of school next year, he plans for APEX being offered during every period of the day with a teacher in the room to help. Each period would also be specialized to an area of study, such as math, science, English or social studies, with a teacher assigned that hour who has expertise in that area, but would not exclude a student of another area of study to attend that period. And then the 3-4 p.m. and 4-5 p.m. blocks as well. To add to the flexibility of this program, once a student has a log-in and password, they can go online and learn anywhere they have access to internet.

This is not a program for a student who doesn't like a particular teacher and wants an alternative. If the class is being taught by an NBHS teacher, APEX is not an option. Another thing it's not is the end-all cure for dropouts or at-risk students, but it is a tremendous attempt to reach out and help students, or former students up to 19 years of age, who might feel discouraged about attaining the required amount of credits to graduate

What does it cost? The student's cost... $0. This program has been funded with Federal grants and Gast feels comfortable that funding will continue from the same source for quite some time.

At this point, the program is being utilized as a credit recovery program. Gast commented, "My goal is that two years from now we shouldn't have anybody in credit trouble." However, he looks forward to expanding the services of APEX to include transitional classes from Jr. High to High School, specific unit/concept tutorials, and Advanced Placement (AP) and Honors classes

"Espionage" is a winner for Erickson in BSSD spelling bee

Few middle school students look forward to spelling words like "lugubrious", "effervescent" or "entrepreneur", much less plan to do it accurately in front of 250 strangers quietly observing you. However, more than 40 students from across the Bering Strait School District annually practice for just such an ordeal. The BSSD Spelling Bee is the annual competition that results in a champion who represents BSSD in the state Spelling Bee in Anchorage.

The event is open to fourth through eighth graders from all 15 sites. It is a great opportunity for young students to hone their public speaking skills and build confidence as they face the natural fear of standing alone in public. There has been one instance where the Bee was held via the video-conferencing network, but that was due to bad weather and the benefits mentioned were lost. Weather played a part in this year's competition in Savoonga, as Diomede (due to lack of runway) and Gambell (due to weather) were unable to physically attend. They were allowed to participate via videoconference but could not place due to the very different spelling environment.

As many of these contests go, the first couple of rounds are an act of attrition. By the end of the second round the field was trimmed by more than half. The remaining spellers, however, appeared to have prepared well and were attacking each word with confidence. Fans at the other sites gathered around video monitors to watch their favorite speller attempt to stay in the competition.

Starting round 6 the bee was down to four spellers on site and one in Gambell. With the tension beginning to show on the spellers the Savoonga crowd began to anticipate the end. With two of the four final spellers being from the Savoonga team, the excitement was even higher. The first speller to slip was from Elim and the battle was on for the final three spellers: Adrianne Ookmealingok and Wendy Seppilu from Savoonga and Talon Erickson from Unalakleet. Round 7 saw Wendy miss her word and the battle was on for first. The remaining duo went back and forth for many rounds with Adrianne taking charge and threatening to take the title with two separate championship word opportunities. Each time, however, she erred and the competition forged on. Finally, after several rounds and enthusiastic support for both spellers from the largest crowd to ever watch a BSSD Spelling Bee, Talon grabbed a championship word opportunity. His eyes lit up when he heard the word "espionage." An avid reader who enjoys science fiction and mysteries, the seventh grader correctly spelled the word and finally took the top spot. Talon will represent the BSSD at the State Spelling Bee on March 3 in Anchorage.

(It should be noted that Gambell speller Ollin Apatiki had a great performance and was a part of the final three, but missed a word, so was eliminated.)

Adrianne Ookmealingok, Wendy Seppilu from Savoonga and Talon Erickson from Unalakleet.

Rev. Sonray new Lutheran pastor

Our Savior Lutheran Church celebrated the installation of its new pastor, Rev. Karen L. Sonray, on Saturday, February 12 in a festive worship service. Bishop Michael Keys of the Alaska Synod of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America presided at the installation service, which was attended by people of various faith communities in Nome.

LOCAL

The Methodist Inupiaq Choir sang at the event, as did the Lutheran Choir and a mass choir. Greetings were brought from the Nome Ministerial Association president Rev.

Youl Rhee and Rev. Brian Crockett of Teller/Brevig Mission.

Pastor Karen Sonray was born and raised in Anchorage. She served at Alaska Native Lutheran Church in Anchorage from 1994-2010 and has partnered in ministry with many of the extended family systems of the Seward Peninsula. Rev. Karen Sonray received a Masters of Divinity from Wartburg Theological Seminary in Dubuque, Iowa. She arrived here in January along with her husband, Rev. George Sonray who is retired, and their daughter Linnea.

Our Savior Lutheran Church began serving the Nome community in the early 1950s and began its early worship in the Quonset hut, which still stands on the property near Tobuk Alley. The new church building is located at Fifth Ave. and Bering St. It houses historical archives and artifacts from over 100-years of Lutheran presence in Seward Peninsula villages.

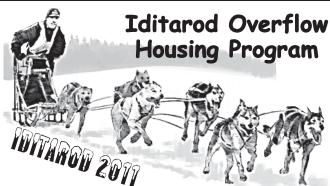

The congregation looks forward to a new chapter of their ministry and some new directions of outreach and service

The arts multiply learning results

By Kim Sweeny

Bering Strait School District teachers were jazzed to spend a weekend in early February learning from Alaska's Teacher of the Year, Lorrie Heagy of Juneau. Ms. Heagy brought a wealth of national and international teaching experience to help BSSD teachers learn how to integrate music into math and science content instruction.

Clapping, singing, song-writing, dancing and instrumentation were part of engaging lessons that solidified basic concepts that teachers are required to teach and students must learn in order to be successful in the district's core curriculum.

Creating note patterns with cups, creating songs about the water cycle and addition facts, and clapping games that worked multiplication memory were some of the activities that had teachers up on their feet throughout the weekend. As Heagy demonstrated, the use of music helps to teach cross medial brain stimulation, information "chunking", movement sequencing, and the power of story weaving. As these strategies are integrated into other instruction, students learn more actively and often better remember what they have learned.

The BSSD, a member of Alaska Arts Education Consortium, is in its second year of an Alaska State Council on the Arts-New Visions grant. Through this grant, the Bering Strait School District is intentionally using integrated arts instruction to not only enhance content learning and promote a sense of belonging, but also to advance the development of the 21st century skills of creativity, critical thinking and problem solving. BSSD arts opportunities include Artist in Schools residencies. school art shows, the purchase and use of ARTiculate visual kits at all sites, summer school sessions that include artists teaming with teachers, creating a visual arts curriculum, arts presenters at district in-services and ongoing staff development through AAEC Basic Arts Institutes and working weekends such as the recent music event. In the future, BSSD looks to partnering with Nome City Schools to maximize talent and resources in the region where traditionally the arts have been central to life. Look for ongoing news about our progress as we add creativity to our education plan.

What to do If exposed to tuberculosis

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Someone recently asked me what she should do if she were exposed to a person who has tuberculosis.

The answer to this question is important because the Norton Sound region has one of the highest concentrations of new tuberculosis (TB) cases in the state. According to the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services, there are two to three new cases of active tuberculosis (TB) in the Norton Sound region every year. This is five times greater than the average rate statewide.

This means that over a lifetime most people in the Norton Sound region stand a good chance of being exposed to someone who has active TB. The chances are highest for those who work in healthcare or who work closely with homeless individuals. But this does not necessarily mean every exposed person will contract TB.

Tuberculosis is caused by an organism called Mycobacterium tuberculosis. It is spread from person-to-person on respiratory droplets that become airborne when a sick person coughs or sneezes. It is not passed by sharing utensils, wearing clothes, or touching items used by an infected person. In fact, most cases of TB are contracted only by those living and sleeping in close quarters with an infected person who is actively coughing.

Tuberculosis is different from most other infectious diseases because it grows very slowly. This is why small, brief exposures to TB rarely lead to active disease. The body can quickly wall off a small number of bacteria before they divide to cause an active infection.

For this reason, TB infections are divided into two different types: latent TB and active TB.

When the body is able to contain the TB bacteria and prevent any signs of illness the infection is called Latent TB is not "latent." contagious. Though people with latent TB take medication to reduce the PPD test, is used to determine TB bacteria. In this test a small amount of purified protein derivative (PPD) is injected just under the skin. The protein in this occurs causing a wheal or bump to 48-72 hours. The absence of a

A few people with latent TB will go on to develop signs of illness like fever, night sweats, and cough. This is called active TB. If left untreated, active TB causes a slow death with weight loss that makes a person appear to be wasting away, which is why TB was once called "consumption." A person with active TB is contagious and should be under the care of medical professionals.

A simple skin test, often called

People who take immunosuppressant medications for certain cancers or people treated for autoimmune disease may not react to the PPD test and must have alternative testing performed by their providers to rule out TB exposure.

mediate danger she faced. Since Howard was unable to repair the generator because of his injuries, they put out a distress call for help. Soon an Australian ship came to help. They sent over an electrician to repair the generator (Yes, you guessed it; they sent over Mr. Tom Ellis).

After repairs, the ship was able to make its way back to America carrying all those who were injured, including

Fenton Howard. The act of kindness that allowed Tom called isoniazid (INH). medication must be taken for nine months to ensure the slow-growing TB is eradicated. Only people who actively convert from a negative PPD skin test to a positive PPD skin test need to be treated.

Because the optimum window for treatment is the first two years after an exposure, many high-risk groups like healthcare workers, teachers, people with diabetes mellitus, and homeless individuals should have PPD testing performed annually.

Only people with active TB, the contagious form, require intensive treatment for eradicating the tuberculosis bacteria. This treatment involves a combination of up to four medications given over an extended period of time.

If you are in a high-risk group that is not routinely tested for TB or if you believe you have been exposed to someone with an active TB infection, talk with your provider or public health nurse about appropriate testing.

Clara Emelia Paniptchuk Oyoumick Kiiriq

Clara died on January 4, 2011. She was born September 11, 1915 to Reuben and Katherine Paniptchuk in Unalakleet. She was the first of eight children and born in her Aunt Qairuaq's porch. (Hanna Karlson was her nurse). Oliver Anawrok (Qairuaq's son-in-law) went to locate Reuben to bring him the good news. With a little mist in the air, Reuben ran to the river to wash his hands and stood awestricken until Oliver reminded him of his new daughter. He told Oliver to go to the store to buy something special for his new daughter. In the meantime, he raced over to see and embrace his daughter. She was given several Eskimo names as the ladies would gather to admire a new family member; new names such as Kuvyaqhaq (Qairuaq's other name), Ikiinaq, and Kiiriq (Clara's favorite) after Katherine's mom. Her roots came from the Buckland and Selawik area.

Clara has a lengthy legacy; she loved the Lord and trained her family to know Christ. As she got near the age of dating, Katherine, her mom, would tease her daughter Clara and say in an Inupiaq-teasing way (singing) that Oyoum was coming. Axel Oyoumick and Clara got married on December 10, 1933 and they had 11 children together. Central to their bondship and family upbringing were: Christ was the center of their lives and to live with the bounties of the land, air, and sea that God provided. God was good.

Clara Emelia Paniptchuk Oyoumick Kiiriq

Alex and Clara served a year as a pastoral team in Mt. Village and after losing their oldest daughter, they moved back to Unalakleet where they raised their family. Clara was widowed early in her life; Alex died on January 10, 1963 as he succumbed to cancer. Reliance on the Lord and seeking means to survive, Clara did not falter. She raised her children under the guidance of God, but still retained her participation and leadership in local sewing and missionary helper clubs. She taught several Sunday school classes and consulted many of these church topics with the ladies that served in the same roles. One of her favorite classes was the Adult Sunday school class that she taught in Inupiaq. She spoke of the Trinity in one session and to a confused student of hers she used the analogy how 3-in-1 oil works to explain how the Trinity similarly works. It finally registered.

Adaptations to a monetary lifestyle meant Clara, an Inupiaq who went as far as eighth grade, took the task as a "volunteer" for the Public Health Service for 20 years and worked an additional five years with pay. She enjoyed working with Arnie Beltz, May Ivanoff, and Sarah Eben. She stated, "The only pay I received was when people gave me Eskimo foods such as dried meat and seal oil when I helped them. I really appreciated that because it was hard to get during those times and that makes me feel good." She delivered an estimated 30 babies and she remembered the one delivered at the Air Force hill after Unalakleet experienced a flood. This boy was born in the 1960s and the medics took credit in the Anchorage papers. Clara's response was, "Just as long as the boy is healthy." She spoke to her patients in Inupiaq and translated to the doctors of their conditions. One such incident occurred when

We Thank You

The family of "Auntie Clara" Oyoumick praise and thank God for all those who helped Mom in her life and during her final days on earth. Mom was a health aide, cook, Sunday School teacher and encourager from her heart. We appreciate all those gifted ones in our communities who assist in our times of need: Patrick and Mercy Sullivan and workers at "All About Care" Home; the doctors/nurses at ANMC; Providence Hospice; Liz Enderud (retired), Juan, and Megan at Southcentral; Norton Sound Health Care workers; Norton Sound Sled Dog Club; Unalakleet Native Corporation; City of Native Village of Unalakleet (IRA); Anchorage First Covenant Church; Unalakleet Covenant Church; Pastor Curtis Ivanoff and Pastor Rick Hinkey; Givers of flowers and food, donators of time and finance. We honor God and parents by giving thanks and living lives reflecting the values they taught us. Well doers at times become weary, but rarely have anything to regret.

members. This is a blatant double standard and a mockery of equity. Senators and Representatives do not sacrifice more than Alaska's military members who deploy repeatedly into harm's way fighting our nation's wars. Yet, they are treated differently and afforded more leniency by the PFD. This is egregious and shame-

I would ask that you make a concerted effort to rectify this enormous gap in parity between two groups who have both chosen to serve and represent their state and country. I understand folks are extremely busy, and I would very much appreciate any response they have time to write. Thank you very much.

Hi Nome.

In July 2009 I tried to row from Cape Prince of Wales to Uelen in Russia. Because of strong currents and waves, a helicopter picked me up and flew me to Nome.

I left my boat between Wales and Little Diomede

Could you please help me, and check if somebody has found my boat, and maybe taken care of it?

If you can print an announcement or something like that, I will be very

Dear Editor,

I was shocked to open up the latest edition of The Nome Nugget and see the obituary of Stan Sobocienski. I was fortunate enough growing up to be part of his life through his son Colo. Stan had a huge heart and always had a smile on his face.

Many nights I stayed over at their home and it was never a problem with me being there for Stan. I would like to send my condolences to his family Chugie, Becka and

Rest in peace Stan. Love and forever grateful, Tim Parker Kenai, AK 99611

RE: Christmas Program Incident at St. Michael, printed January 2011, reference J.D.R. Letter 1/27/11

As people were gathering for the program to start, the children, along with my grandson were making a lot of noise and I observed one woman go up to my grandson and said something to him I didn't hear. Among all the children making Alexandria Tucker was sent to the Anchorage hospital and Ananauraq could not understand why she was being sent. She had TB and came back several months after being healed. When she came back to Unalakleet, Ananauraq went directly to Clara and told her, "I'm scared for you. Get scolding from doctor." Clara just replied, "OK," and smiled. Additionally, she was a cook at the old BIA school.

She received the Della Keats Healing Hands Award twice. She celebrated her 90th birthday at the Colorado Rockies' baseball field. She enjoyed sports and paid special interest to the Covenant High Wolverine's team. She even volunteered as cook for CHS and paid her dues in a gym named after her son Stanton. Almost always, she and her sister Guerie were side-by-side cheering for their team. Her most special award, though, is coming from our heavenly father. She emphasized Christ as the only means to a better life. She related to scriptures and had a special way to convey Christ's love through her work with the people she loved.

She is survived by her family: sister Guerie Towarak, brothers Franklin (Jessie), Herbert Sr., /Lorena, and Gilbert/Eva Panipchuk; her daughters Martina Bailey and Rachel/Gerard Fahy; her sons Merlin / Mildred, Kermit /

Mabel, Henry / Betty, Joe l/ Olga, and Leland Oyoumick. She has 21 grandchildren, 33 great-grandchildren, and nine great-great grandchildren. She was preceded in death by her parents, husband, sons Stanton and Ray, daughters Lillian and Rachel (first one), brother Martin, sisters Ebba Katchatag and Emma Nelson. To many she was Auntie Clara. She would love to see folks added in the Body of Christ if they haven't accepted Christ.

Matthew 25:21 "His lord said unto him, Well done, thou good and faithful servant...enter thou into the joy of the thy lord."

Constance "Connie" Madden

On Monday, February 7th, 2011, surrounded by family, Constance "Connie" Madden died of lung cancer.

Connie was born in Scranton, Pennsylvania on August 31, 1934. The day she came into the world, grayling, trout, and salmon 3,5000 miles away on the Seward Peninsula trembled in fear. Connie was raised in South Sterling, PA in the midst of the family business, Connie's Fudge, where she developed her lifelong penchant for sweets. While attending high school, she met her husband, the late Bob Madden, Sr. The two high school sweethearts would marry shortly after Connie graduated from East Stroudsburg State Teachers College. Soon, Bob's career in the Air Force took them on many ad-noise, one was singled out.

When the program was over my wife asked our grandson to deliver her sister's presents and he left. After about 15 minutes we left the building. As the Christmas program was being cleared of people, I was warming up my four-wheeler because the weather outside was very cold and I did not realize what was happening to my grandson, and the four-wheeler was not exactly quiet. I did not hear what was going on. I was wondering why there was a shouting match between my grandson and the young lady outside

The letter that was written reminded me of an old type western movie where some old geezers were shouting "Hang 'em high" to some town residents and wanting some out of towners to join them.

I was not in the building when this incident that was described was happening, but remember there are witnesses.

My grandson has a broken collarbone and he lucked out; his neck wasn't broken.

Thank you. Victor Joe St. Michael, AK 99659

Connie lived all over the world, from France to Colorado to Minnesota. However, for the past 37 years she called Nome her home. In Nome she worked for the State of Alaska Department of Community Development and Regional Affairs, and continued creating opportunities for the people of Nome even after retiring. She founded a local non-profit called "Drugs Aren't Wanted in Nome" (DAWN) to provide activities for youth, and educate young people about the dangers of substance abuse. She also started the Nome National Forest, and through the restaurant that she ran with her husband, Fat Freddie's, supported numerous local causes.

In addition to community development, Connie was also passionate about the outdoors. She hunted moose into her mid-60s, and continued fly fishing for years after that. If she wasn't drinking coffee at Fat Freddie's with friends, one could likely find her on the riverbank, or at her Salmon Lake or Dexter cabins, plying the waters with her fly rod.

Connie's humor, caring, and straightforward personality will be deeply missed by all those surviving her, including her son, Bob Madden, Jr. and his wife Sherri, her four grandsons Dustin, Reese, Chase, and Shane, her brother LaVerne, her two sisters Rosemary and Shirley, and many other relatives and friends.

In keeping with her wishes, there will be no memorial service. However, there will be a celebration of her life held at Salmon Lake on June 18, 2011.

Edith Arnold Morgan

Early Alaskan Edith Arnold Morgan died in Wasilla on February 10, of natural causes.

Born Edith Hoop on May 11,

1921 in Ellensburg, Washington, she came to Nome with her family in 1932. In 1939 Edith was crowned Miss Nome and enjoyed the adventure of flying to Fairbanks with well known bush pilot Noel Wein for the Territorial competition. After graduation from high school, she married Wilbur Arnold. During the war years, Edith and Wilbur left Nome to live in Washington and Oregon. They returned to Nome in 1953 where they raised five children and provided care for her brother Budd Hoop. She and Wilbur owned and operated the Arctic Sanitary Service until Wilbur's death in 1963. Edith was then appointed Postmaster of the Nome post office and served until 1974.

Edith left Nome in 1974 to marry an old family friend, Frank Morgan. They enjoyed their retirement years in Anchorage, California and Colorado. It was during these years that Edith found the artist in herself. She handmade many beautiful quilts for her family and then set her heart on craft painting. She found joy in painting and sharing her artwork with family and friends. After Frank's death in 1995, Edith eventually moved back to Alaska in 2001

SBA revamps 8(a) program

By Diana Haecker

Last Friday, the federal Small Business Administration published changes to the so-called 8(a) program that gives Alaska Native Corporations some advantages in securing government contracts.

In the past year, the 8(a) business to live with her daughter in Wasilla. Her family writes, "Our mother worked hard to make the growing up years the best they could be. She was hardworking, affectionate and had a positive influence on our lives. Her pleasing personality made her a pleasure to be with. She had a smile that could cheer anyone. She always found time for school activities, Boy and Girl Scouts, camping, berry picking, fishing and all the other childhood activities five children can dream up. She was there for us."

Edith was preceded in death by her parents, Herman and Emily Hoop, brother Budd, husbands Wilbur Arnold and Frank Morgan and grandson Geoffrey Arnold. She is survived by her children and their spouses: Raymond Arnold and wife Betha of Palo Alto, California; Richard Arnold and wife Arlene of Brighton, Colorado; Alice Smith and husband Gary of Wasilla; Ted Arnold and wife Betty of Anchorage; Nancy Denyer and husband Paul of Anchorage; five grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The family will gather this summer for a memorial and to scatter her ashes in Nome.

development program has been in the center of attention by congressional leaders who wanted to see the program changed to reign in alleged abuse of the program. The revisions are the first comprehensive overhaul of the 8(a) program in more than 10

The 8(a) program's goal is to give Alaska Native shareholders the benefits of their corporation's business successes. Critics, including Congresswoman Claire McCaskill, (D-Missouri) said that the corporations get too many advantages over other contractors, and that not enough jobs and money make it back to the villages. SBA said in a press release that the changes are to make sure that the benefits flow to the intended recipients and help prevent waste, fraud and abuse

The new rules now require firms owned by tribes, Alaska Native Corporations, Native Hawaiian Organizations and Community Development Corporations to report benefits flowing back to their respective communities. Also, Native firms must provide more information relating to the economic disadvantage argument and must reveal total assets, gross income, retirement accounts.

Changes also include that in the case when an 8(a) joint venture contract is awarded, the 8(a) firm must perform 40 percent of the work

The rules were published last Friday in the federal register and will become effective on March 14.

EPA and U.S. Coast Guard sign MOU to protect oceans

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency and U.S. Coast Guard signed a memorandum of understanding to work together to coordinate efforts to prevent and enforce against illegal discharges of pollutants from vessels, such as cruise ships and oil tankers. Under the MOU, USCG has agreed to incorporate components of EPA's vessel general permit program into its existing inspection procedures to help the United States address vessel pollution in U.S. waters. The MOU creates a framework for improving EPA and USCG cooperation on data tracking, training, monitoring, enforcement and industry outreach. The agencies have also agreed to improve existing data requirements so that information on potential violations observed during inspections can be sent to EPA for evaluation and follow-up. The vessel permit program applies to more than 61,000 commercial ships based in the U.S. and more than 8,000 foreign ships operating in U.S. waters.

Unalakleet's Paul Johnson wins Portage 200

By Jeffrey Erickson

With the temperature dipping fast and daylight fading, five stalwart dog drivers waited for the 3 p.m. start of the 2011 Portage 200 dog race. The 30-year-old race that for various reasons has lost some of its luster recently, but is nonetheless a challenging race run over an 80 mile stretch of the Iditarod Race trail. It goes from Unalakleet to Kaltag and return. From the races in the 1980s where Iditarod veterans like Rick Swenson, Susan Butcher, Clarence Towarak, Jerry Austin and Emmitt Peters joined formidable local teams in a major mid-distance race to the present day where it is faithfully held by the Unalakleetbased Norton Sound Sled Dog Club primarily for local mushers, it is still an exciting race for dog drivers and mushing enthusiasts.

Unalakleet musher Paul Johnson, who is running the Iditarod this year and has dominated the local racing circuit, led this year's field. Kusko 300 veteran Louis Ambrose of St. Michael added family bloodlines to the race. He is the son-in-law of the late legendary dog driver Jerry Austin. Donald Towarak, son of Iditarod veteran Clarence "Junie" Towarak, was driving their kennel's team and two rookies, Matt Roesch of Unalakleet and Alex Otten of St. Michael rounded out the field. Matt was running dogs out of another Unalakleet kennel (Doug Katchatag), and Alex was driving a second team from the Austin/Ambrose family.

Leaving Unalakleet at -20°F was not too bad with winds very light, but teams didn't know what they would face in the next 30-36 hours. Trailbreakers had worked from both ends of the trail to pack deep snow and break up drifts, but more snow had fallen and an unusual wind direction resulted in drifting that was abnormal and more difficult to maneuver. The added snow also added to the difficulty in the pass between the two villages making the going slow and arduous. These trail conditions would have been a challenge on their own but the temperatures began to be the story of the race as the mercury continued to plunge.

Towarak faced early problems with an injury to one of his wheel dogs and wisely chose to return to Unalakleet rather than pack the dog the entire way in adverse conditions. (Race rules require that you finish with all dogs you start with – no dog drops.)

The race continued for the remaining four teams with Johnson pulling into the early lead that put him and hour ahead in the first 40 miles. The trail to the Old Woman shelter cabin was decent, dogs were fresh and times reflected that, but from there on things began to change as temperatures edged closer to -40°F and the fresh, deep snow took its toll on dog and man. Where the first 36 miles took three and a half hours, the second 45 took more than nine. By the time the group, led by Johnson, made their way to Kaltag, temperatures were near -50°F. Dogs and their drivers needed more rest than normal and a chance to warm up before heading back to the coast.

After an almost 4 hour layover, Johnson again climbed on the runners and faced the brutal chill. He had pulled in with feet nearing frostbite, but had warmed and was ready to finish the job. With the sun rising (but temperatures not), he headed up the pass and drove his team toward home. Pulling into Old Woman his comment was, "That was the toughest night of mushing I've ever had." This is saying a lot coming from an Iditarod veteran and runner of innumerable shorter races, as well as difficult training runs.

Rookie Roesch had followed Johnson out of Kaltag, cutting his rest a little, and was only a couple hours behind with 40 miles to the finish line, but could not catch him as Johnson finished the race at 9:00 p.m. to grab his first title.

At the awards banquet Sunday night it was worth noting that the mushers did not have the normal post-race anecdotes of the trail to share. They all just mentioned the extreme cold and how thankful they were to finish. This was a race that tested survival skills and internal fortitude, which each exhibited in their ability to finish and to do it with healthy dogs.

Finish w/times:

- 1. Paul Johnson 30 hrs.
- 2. Matt Roesch 34 hrs.
- 3. Alex Otten 36 hrs .34 min.
- 4. Louis Ambrose 37 hrs. 36 min.5. Donald Towarak Scratch

Awards:

- 1. Paul Johnson $3,000 plus sealskin mittens
- 2. Matt Roesch $1750
- 3. Alex Otten $12504. Louis Ambrose $750

Halfway prize – Paul Johnson: Large box of local delicacies from Kaltag

Top Rookie – Matt Roesch: $100

Legal Notice

Important information about the $3.4 billion Indian Trust Settlement

For current or former IIM account holders, owners of land held in trust or restricted status, or their heirs

There is a proposed Settlement in Cobell v. Salazar, a class action lawsuit about individual Indian land held in trust by the federal government. This notice is just a summary. For details, call the toll-free number or visit the website listed below.

The lawsuit claims that the federal government violated its duties by (a) mismanaging trust funds/assets, (b) improperly accounting for those funds, and (c) mismanaging trust land/assets. The trust funds include money collected from farming and grazing leases, timber sales, mining, and oil and gas production from land owned by American Indians/Alaska Natives.

If you are included in the Settlement, your rights will be affected. To object to the Settlement, to comment on it, or to exclude yourself, you should get a detailed notice at www.IndianTrust.com or by calling 1-800-961-6109.

Can I get money?

There are two groups or "Classes" in the Settlement eligible for payment. Each Class includes individual IIM account holders or owners of land held in trust or restricted status who were alive on September 30, 2009.

Historical Accounting Class Members

- Had an open individual Indian Money account ("IIM") anytime between October 25, 1994 and September 30, 2009, and
- The account had at least one cash transaction.
- Includes estates of account holders who died as of September 30, 2009, if the IIM account was still open on that date.

Trust Administration Class Members

- Had an IIM account recorded in currently available data in federal government systems any time from approximately 1985 to September 30, 2009, or
- Owned trust land or land in restricted status as of September 30, 2009.
- Includes estates of landowners who died as of September 30, 2009 where the trust interests were in probate as of that date. This means you have asked a court to transfer ownership of the deceased landowner's property.

An individual may be included in one or both Classes.

What does the Settlement provide?

- A $1.5 billion fund to pay those included in the Classes.
- A $1.9 billion fund to buy small interests in trust or restricted land owned by many people.
- Up to $60 million to fund scholarships to improve access to higher education for Indian youth.
- A government commitment to reform the Indian trust management and accounting system.

How much can I get?

- Historical Accounting Class Members will each get $1,000.
- Trust Administration Class Members will get at least $500.
- If you own a small parcel of land with many other people, the federal government may ask you to sell it. You will be offered fair market value. If you sell your land it will be returned to tribal control.

If you believe you are a member of either Class and are not receiving IIM account statements, you will need to call the toll-free number or visit the website to register.

What are my other rights?

- If you wish to keep your right to sue the federal government about the claims in this Settlement, you must exclude yourself by April 20, 2011.
- If you stay in the Settlement you can object to or comment on it by April 20, 2011. The detailed notice explains how to exclude yourself or object/comment.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia will hold a hearing on June 20, 2011, to consider whether to approve the Settlement. It will also consider a request for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses in the amount of $99.9 million. However, Class Counsel has fee agreements that would pay them 14.75% of the funds created for the Classes, which could result in an award of $223 million. The Court may award more or less than these amounts based on controlling law. If approved, these payments and related costs will come out of the Settlement funds available for payment to Class Members.

If you wish, you or your own lawyer may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost. For more information, call or go to the website shown below or write to Indian Trust Settlement, P.O. Box 9577, Dublin, OH 43017-4877.

City and Sitnasuak revise proposal for state office building

By Laurie McNicholas

What is the status of the proposed new state office building?

The question came up during a meeting of the Nome Planning Commission on Feb. 16 as commissioners discussed results of a community survey with Eileen Bechtol of Bechtol Planning and Development. She is helping the city update the Nome Comprehensive Plan.

Bechtol said 156 Nomeites responded to the city's community survey last fall. The survey results she presented to the commission include more than 70 responses to the question: "Do you think it is important to keep essential offices on Front Street, i.e., State Office Building, P.O, Courthouses, etc.?"

Commission Chairman Tom Sparks noted that an access corridor via Steadman Street to the Nome Bypass Road has been discussed in relation to the proposed state office building. The building site proposed by the Alaska Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities is at Sixth Avenue and Stedman Street on land owned by Alaska Gold Co. DOTPF proposed to build a $40 million, 60,000 square foot building to house Nome offices of state agencies, including those occupying the old, storm-damaged state building standing by the seawall in the flood plain on Front Street.

Bechtol asked about the status of the state office building. Sparks and

Man found dead on birthday

Dave Wininger was found dead on his 52nd birthday.

Wininger lived at 209 W. D Street. His neighbor, Teddy Cruise, discovered Wininger's body at 12:45 p.m. Friday. Wininger was hunched over the handrail on his front porch. Nome Police and Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service responded during blizzard conditions with temperatures near -3°F. Wininger was taken to the hospital where he was pronounced dead.

His body was sent to the Medical Examiner in Anchorage to determine the exact cause of death. His neighbor, Cruise, reported hearing Wininger in the street outside of his home at 3 a.m. yelling and apparently was intoxicated.

Wininger worked at RJ's Auto and was from Indiana. He was born Feb. 18, 1959 and died Feb. 18, 2011. He had no family in Nome, but next of kin have been notified.

It is all very interesting and a good case of mental gymnastics. As said above, there is not much you can do about it, but I thought you might like

Captain Zero

Rock-headed stubbornness is just about all we can expect from Gov. Sean Parnell, and what's worse is that we could have to endure this guy for two-and-a-half terms. Heaven forbid we should have such unenlightened leadership. Let's give him a cape and pin a big fat "zero" on his chest. He must think we are all super-healthy and rolling in big bucks. Is he really so out of touch? Not all Alaskans are covered by Indian Health Service. Thousands of us are either underinsured or without insurance because we can't afford it.

When Gov. Parnell was in Nome recently he was very reluctant to discuss the need for health care and did not take time to listen to local concerns. He told The Nugget that the Florida judge's ruling was the law of the land and that the health care reform act is unconstitutional and will be decided by the Supreme Court. (It should be noted that lower court judges also ruled that the civil rights laws were unconstitutional). Parnell is holding Alaskans hostage to his intransigence by refusing to apply for federal grants to implement health insurance exchanges. Can we sue the governor for failure to act in our best interest?

Parnell says he is against what he calls one-size-fits-all federal health care mandates. Parnell's stubbornness strips Alaskans naked and leaves us standing in the cold. We should live long enough to see any Parnell plan for health care. Don't count on it. He seems to be telemeditating into the permafrost and thinks the solution to health care reform is to make it easier to enroll in public assistance. How unimpressive. Captain Zero needs a reality check. -N.L.M.-

Dear Editor,

This letter of information will be mostly directed to the residents of this fine community of Golovin. After over 35 years of public service to our community and its residents, Tom and I are officially retired. We never thought we would see the day come and now, we find ourselves with time on our hands and time to spend fishing and doing other things we love like putting away food.

We have had some meaningful times. If we said it was all fun, we would be lying, but now we look back and there are more things to be thankful for then to regret. Our people, for the most part, have been supportive and thankful for the few good things we have accomplished.

I would ask you to look at Golovin and say, "well look at us now!" Electricity, water and sewer, telephone, internet, computers and cell phones! We embrace them all and are glad we came along in history to be a part of it in small ways. There certainly are things that must be overlooked and forgotten, but that is another story. We have family, friends and lots of loved one who have helped us in many ways-too many to list, and we hope and wish the best for everyone. We are proud to be a part of the Golovin commu-

Proud to say that we are a part of you. We have seen history made in Golovin and watch in wonder as the children, grandchildren and even more generations come and grow in, with and for our village. We have been part of the transition from Territory to Statehood and saw most of the problems and benefits that come—not to mention being some small part of a problem (?) but again that's another story. Our final message is: Be proud of Golovin, be a part of its future—and the only way to do that is be involved with city government, tribal government and, most of all, education. Education is the magic tool for all of us and take advantage of it now and always.

Alaska State News

Compiled by Diana Haecker

U.S. House of Representatives votes on far-reaching spending cuts

Alaska Congressman Don Young voted for a bill that aims to cut government spending and would keep the federal government funded beyond March 4, for the rest of the 2011 fiscal year. The Republican-dominated House voted on spending cuts that affect funding for the health care reform, EPA regulatory functions, the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, and Planned Parenthood, among others. The bill allocates $1.028 trillion in discretionary budget and $106.5 billion in savings compared to the president's FY 2011 discretionary spending request and $58.6 billion in savings compared to the current budget. There were 583 amendments to the bill, including two amendments introduced by Young. He proposed to strike language that would have eliminated funding for the Alaska Native Education Equity Act.

Young's other amendment, which also passed, limited funds for the Environmental Appeals Board if they were to negatively impact any permit issued by the EPA for activities on the Arctic Outer Continental Shelf. Other amendments that passed also would cripple the EPA's ability to deny proposed and active mining permits under a section of the Clean Water Act.

An amendment from three Texas Republican Congressmen also passed that defines specifically what greenhouse gases are and prohibits the EPA from imposing regulations on those gasses emitted by a stationary source for seven months. Environmental watchdogs like the Center for Biological Diversity commented on the bill, saying that this bill isn't mere tinkering with policy, but it's carpet-bombing some of the nation's most important environmental laws.

The Public Media Association, an alliance between the Association of Public Television Stations and NPR, expressed deep disappointment with the House. "If this House-passed bill stands, it would endanger hundreds of public radio and television stations that serve as educational, informational and cultural lifelines for millions of people nationwide, and it would be a death sentence for stations serving rural and small-town America," said PMA president Patrick Butler. "To dismantle a public broadcasting system that 170 million Americans regularly rely on for lifelong learning, in-depth news and public affairs programming, and world-class culture - all for the sake of reducing one year's federal budget deficit by less than three thousandths of one percent – is to recklessly defy the will of the American people, who routinely rank public broadcasting just behind national defense as the best use of taxpayer dollars." KUAC and Alaska Public Radio Network, and PBS would be affected by the spending cuts. The bill now goes before the Democrat-led Senate.

Governor not to implement health care overhaul

In a speech at the Juneau Chamber of Commerce, Governor Sean Parnell informed the public that he wouldn't be applying for federal grants to implement health insurance exchanges in Alaska. He cited a Florida court ruling that called the health care reform unconstitutional and Parnell called it "the law of the land." Parnell said that although he rejects the federal health care reform approach, he would continue to reshape the health care system to fit the unique needs of Alaskans.

According to APRN, two other federal judges have upheld the law, and one in Virginia upheld all of it except the controversial provision requiring citizens to buy health insurance or face penalties. A federal grant of $1 million would have helped setting up a staterun insurance exchange to give people a tool to compare insurance plans in Alaska. Parnell said he directed the State Division of Insurance to look at ways to develop a health care exchange without using federal money.

Prior to the Friday deadline, seven state Senators delivered a letter to Parnell, urging him to apply for the grant. Senators Hollis French, Johnny Ellis, Dennis Egan, Bettye Davis, Joe Thomas, Joe Paskvan and Bill Wielechowski signed the letter. They say that Alaska is the only state not to apply for the grant. They reasoned that a state-operated health insurance exchange would connect individuals and small businesses in Alaska with affordable health coverage through tax credits and a competitive marketplace and that the federal money would get a methodical planning process started.

STATE

By federal law, Alaska must establish a state-based exchange by 2013 or the federal government will create one for the state.

Begich named chairman of oceans subcommittee

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich is the new chair of the subcommittee on oceans, atmosphere, fisheries and the Coast Guard, which is a committee within the Senate committee on commerce, science and transportation. Begich said it's a key assignment and important for Alaska as the subcommittee is responsible for legislation dealing with oceans, coasts, and climate, including coastal zone management; marine fisheries and mammal management; ocean science, weather forecasting; and overseeing NOAA. The subcommittee is also responsible for overseeing the Coast Guard.

Man arrested after killing, standoff in Scammon Bay

On Sunday night a Scammon Bay man was arrested after a daylong standoff. According to Alaska State Troopers, Mike Simon, 51, is accused of shooting and killing 19-year old Irvin Wilson. The tragedy unfolded when Mike Simon went to the house of his girlfriend. According to troopers, they argued and Simon picked up a gun and shot his girlfriend's son, Irvin Wilson. Simon then forced his girlfriend out of the house and took her to his father's house. There, Simon, the woman and another man were in the house when troopers from Bethel arrived at the scene. Eventually Simon let his hostages go and barricaded himself in the house. Troopers took him into custody on Sunday morning. Simon is charged with murder and kidnapping. ABI took over the investigation regarding the death of Irvin Wilson and the circumstances surrounding the standoff.

• City and Sitnasuak revising proposal for state office building on Front St.

Commissioners Randy Romenesko and Greg Smith said they don't know. Commissioner Charles Weiss said it is out to bid. Commissioners Jimmy Adams and Jeff Darling did not comment. Commissioner Jerald Brown was not present, nor was City Manager Josie Bahnke.

In March of last year the Nome Common Council approved a resolution endorsing the Steadman Street site and agreeing to vacate a portion of the Sixth Avenue right of way. The action drew protests from downtown property owners and the Nome Chamber of Commerce. During public comments at a council meeting on April 12, speakers said they do not want state offices to leave Front Street, so the council approved a new resolution welcoming the building but asking the state to consider other sites or combinations on or near Front Street. On May 4 the Nome Planning Commission approved a preliminary plat from Alaska Gold Co. for a new state building at the Sixth and Steadman site. The approval of the plat did not mean the commission took a position on the location of the building.

Subsequently the City of Nome sent a letter to the governor's office laying out a plan for a three-story state building on Front Street, as reported by Sandra Medearis in the July 22, 2010 edition of The Nome Nugget, pp. 1, 6. Medearis said the letter was sent in response to a call from the Dept. of Administration for letters of interest in providing office space for local offices of state agencies.

"The city's plan possibly provides a way for the state to work around procurement laws that rule out solesource, non-competitive 'sweetheart' deals, using a loophole in the law that allows noncompetitive deals on a government to government basis," Medearis wrote. "The proposal then clears the way for City of Nome to sign a sole-source, non-competitive contract allowing Sitnasuak [Native Corp.] to build, manage and collect public money in rents from a state building on Sitnasuak's large lot on Front Street. The plan would require Sitnasuak to buy land from two other private landowners, Mark Sackett and Councilman Jim West Jr., for parking spaces.

"The city, in secret meetings with Sitnasuak and landowners, has developed three options, one of which would require vacating Lanes Way and selling it to Sitnasuak," Medearis continued. "The five-page proposal comprises a two-page letter and three design drawings involving public funds, the discussion of which was not available to the public. Open meeting laws are predicated on allowing the public to witness debate and follow the thinking of their representatives while they arrive at decision involving expenditures of the public money and resources, i.e., sale of a public street...."

Currently the City and Sitnasuak are revising their proposal for a state office building on Front Street. Gov. Sean Parnell recently appointed Marc Luiken as commissioner of DOTPF to replace Leo von Scheben.

On Feb. 14 Mayor Denise Michels reported to the Nome Common Council that she discussed the proposed state office building with Mike Barnhill, deputy commissioner of the Dept. of Administration on Jan. 27 in Juneau. "He was new to the position but had a 30K foot view of the project and asked that we meet with DOTPF and Vern [Jones], procurement specialist for leasing," she wrote. (Michels said she, Councilwoman Josie Stiles and Utility Manager John Handeland met Sitnasuak officials Bill Humphries, chief operating officer, and Janice Dougherty, Nanuaq president in Juneau prior to the meetings.)

Michels also informed the council that Chris Christensen, deputy administrative director of the Alaska Court System told her the General Services Administration will issue a request for proposals in May or June for purchase of the federal building in Nome, which houses the post office and the court. She said the new owner can ask the court to vacate the building or can raise the court's rent (currently $188,000 per year). "This has pushed the need for a justice center as one of four top priorities for the Courts," Michels

On Feb. 17 the Nugget asked Bahnke for an update on the proposed state office building in a phone interview. Bahnke said the city is working toward a government to government agreement between the city and state that would authorize Sitnasuak to construct a state office building on a vacant lot that Sitnasuak owns next to the Bering Straits Native Corp. building on Front Street.

Bahnke said the city would acquire the state office building by a lease agreement in the form of a lease from Sitnasuak and then lease the building to the state. She said that would meet two goals of the council: (1) They want it on Front Street, and (2) they want it to remain on the tax rolls. "This is how we will make it legitimate," she said. She said the legal obligation of the City of Nome under the agreement needs to be clarified.

Bahnke said an ordinance is needed for disposing of the property to the state that will involve a first reading followed by a second reading and public hearing. "This has to happen for a true government to government," she noted.

The Nugget asked Bahnke if a design concept exists for the building. She said DOTPF prepared a one-page cost estimate for constructing a 26,340 square foot building at $6.60 per square foot for a total of $17,384,651 that would accommodate the Nome court, public defender, state troopers and Division of Motor Vehicles, district attorney, office of children's services and adult probation. "Sitnasuak needs to say this is what we can do," Bahnke said. "The mayor says we don't bring it to the governor unless it's open, transparent."

The Nugget asked whether Sitnasuak has prepared an architectural design for the project. "That's what's missing," Bahnke replied. "Sitnasuak is talking hiring an architect/engineer." She said Bill Humphries, Sitnasuak's chief executive officer, has been putting together what the state wants to see in a presentation about the proposed project, but he will resign from his position on March 4.

Reached by phone on Feb. 20, Humphries confirmed he is helping to put together a project presentation to submit to the governor's staff or the DOTPF and said he expects to complete it by March 4. Sitnasuak currently is trying to clarify whether DOTPF or the Dept. of Administration is in charge of the project, he added. He referred the Nugget to Crystal Andersen Booth, Sitnasuak's board chairman and interim president for additional information.

Booth told the Nugget on Feb. 20 that Sitnasuak and the city have a commitment to work together to try to get the state office building on Front Street. She said the presentation Sitnasuak is preparing for approval by the company's board of directors and the state is a concept. If the state commits to the concept, the company will conduct a financial feasibility study for construction of the state office building, present cost figures to the board for review and request its support for the project, she added. Booth said Sitnasuak is advertising for a president to be based in Nome and a chief executive officer for the firm's Anchorage of-

No public hearings held

In May of last year, top officials of Bering Straits Native Corp. criticized the site DOTPF selected for the proposed state office building at the north end of Stedman Street in a letter to then DOTPF Commissioner von Scheben. They called for well-publicized local hearings about the effects of the plan on Nome and the surrounding regions. The letter was published in the May 20, 2010 edition of the Nugget.

No public hearings have been held to learn from Nome residents whether they think it is important to keep the state office building on Front Street. The results of the community survey that posed the question reveal mixed opinions among Nomeites, as shown in the accompanying excerpts from the survey report that Bechtol presented to the Planning Commission on Feb. 16. Some of the excerpts also reflect the priority concerns in survey results as a whole—public drunkenness and eyesores such as derelict buildings.

The commission scheduled a meeting for March 8 at 6 p.m. to discuss the need for abatement of abandoned buildings and junked vehicles in Nome.

Nomeites offer views on keeping state office building on Front St.

Editor's note-Following are excerpts from responses by Nomeites to this question in a community survey conducted by the city last fall: "Do you think it is important to keep essential offices on Front Street, i.e., State Office Building, P. O., Courthouses, etc?"

- In order to keep public service/infrastructure costs down (read construction maintenance, water and sewer maintenance, electrical services, fire and public safety), the city needs to do its best to maintain a compact, walkable community pattern. Otherwise, the city won't be able to sustain itself in a financially responsible manner, and the downtown core will continue to deteriorate and eventually be abandoned to the bars.
- The proposed site for the new State building is a good spot. It's not too far from Front Street that people will still go to the local restaurants, etc. AND the Rec Center usage may go up.

Also, the exorbitant rent rates for unsecured (note Trooper office break-in a year or so ago), under equipped, small office spaces that the State currently uses is a strain on the State's money. We still are part of the State and we need to consider that. A new building would free up some space on Front Street for new/different business opportunities.

A new building would be a benefit! And the location on 6th and Steadman might help Nome grow! (Opening up that area of town to business/home development too!)

• No driver's license and cannot afford cab fare if they are too spread out.

 It takes all of half an hour to walk across town; not everything needs to be on the same street as the bars.

• I understand the desire for building developers to want to build out of the flood plain, and to have more real estate to work with (off of Front Street), and the costs of renovations; however, a fair portion of our citizens do not have motorized vehicles.

Also, people coming in from the villages do not have vehicles, and either walk or hire taxi cabs (which can be quite expensive). Many villagers come in to get an ID or a Drivers License from the DMV, as this is the regional hub.

If all of these essential offices begin moving away from Front Street, my fear is there will be empty decaying buildings left behind, ruining Front Street for tourism, which in turn could increase crime and all the issues surrounding abandoned buildings. I do not believe this is in the best interest for Nome's long-term future.

• It's convenient but in no way a death knell to businesses on Front Street. Like State workers are the only ones who eat out. Besides many in Nome are so lazy they will drive two blocks. If they want to eat out they will regardless of where they work. Besides a little extra exercise might alleviate some of the obesity prevalent in our community.

On a side note, City Council sure made us look like we had our act together when we virtually demanded that the State of Alaska abandon plans for a combo-administrative building off of Front Street. Considering it appears as if the State did their due diligence in holding community meetings to seek input, I am sure they are pleased with all their wasted time and money when the citizens of Nome rebelled.

By the way did anyone else find it ironic that most of the City Council discussions regarding the State building were running concurrently with the new flood plain mapping? Thank god we have a mayor that can think on her own and realized how ridiculous Nome looked by warn-

Nome Joint ditches Newton Peak in favor of Banner Peak LED street lighting planned by Iditarod, fuel delivery in talking stage

By Nancy McGuire

Nome Joint Utilities determined that it is not feasible to put wind generators on Newton Peak; instead they want to redirect their efforts to another site, possibly Banner Peak.

At its Feb. 15 board meeting NJU reviewed discussions with the Alaska Energy Authority and, according to Manager John Handeland, it was determined that additional attempts to monitor wind on Newton Peak should stop. Conditions are too harsh for equipment. The utility documented significant icing conditions on support equipment and there were two unsuccessful attempts to erect monitoring towers. With all these problems in mind, the AEA agreed to let NJU consider installing monitoring towers in the vicinity of the Banner Wind Farm on Banner Peak with the potential of co-locating turbines at that site in the future.

Handeland stated that the presence of an already existing access road and connections to NJU transmission lines are positive factors to consider.

The Banner Wind Farm currently has 18 turbines operating. NJU would consider using 600 KW turbines or 1.5 Megawatt GE turbines. It is projected that the Banner Wind Farm will generate 2 million KW for the NJU system this year.

NJU has hired a consultant to evaluate existing diesel equipment/potential needs, other alternatives for use of wind heat dump loads, etc. The AEA needs this information by mid-April for consideration of the viability of a revised program and potential sizing of wind turbines

LED lighting

Board chair Berda Willson remarked that the new LED street lighting is quite pleasing to the eye. The new lighting is a result of an NSEDC Community Benefits Share to the tune of $100,000. Northern Air Cargo provided freight free of charge and Handeland and the board express thanks for the generous freight dona-

The contributions from NAC and NSEDC will allow the replacement of about 70 percent of the street lighting by the beginning of Iditarod. The City of Nome approved an additional $45,000 to purchase the remaining fixtures. The additional donated shipping has also been agreed courtesy of NAC

Handeland reported that there will be some change in street lighting patterns in various locations; NJU simply plans to replace the lights in their rent location and at a later date evaluate relocation or additional lighting.

Handeland said the Department of Transportation agreed to the possibility of replacing the DOT operated street lights. However, the lights on streets with higher speed limits can't be replaced because the LEDs aren't bright enough to meet existing highway regulations.

Internet billing

Customers will soon be able to access their bills via the internet. NJU will also be able to check credit history, submit information to the credit bureau, follow customers who skip town, etc. The NJU is also reviewing tariffs relating to customer deposits and changes to the billing cycle. Web access should be available in early

Rock Creek circuit damage

NJU reports recent damage to the Rock Creek / Banner Creek circuit along the Center Creek Road. Wind and icing caused bracing on 11 crossarms to pull loose from the poles. Power was shut off till winds subsided and line crew could perform

Leaks

There have been problem with water leaks. Where water bubbles to the surface when the ground is frozen is not always at the location of the leak. Listening devices do not perform well when the surface is frozen solid.

A normal procedure when problem leaks occur is to let the water flow so that it will thaw the ground and make it easier to excavate.

However, a mystery leak has occurred somewhere on N Street between Third and Fourth avenues. Crews from NJU and Public Works have sleuthed out false leads and the water continues to flow and ice continues to build up. NJU is diligently working on a solution. It's not yet been found.

There are two leaks on Sixth Ave. - near the elementary school and the Rec. Center. The leak near the school is excavating to the natural drainage. The leak near the Rec. Center has not broken through the surface yet, but the sinking roadway seems to indicate a problem that might be related to the fire hydrant connection.

EPA

Handeland reported that the EPA Juneau office has submitted NJU's final application package to their Seattle office for a grant to assist with a portion of the Seventh Ave. sewer and Snake River Bridge water line relocation.

Audit

Audit fieldwork from Mikunda-Cottrell is scheduled for April 18.

Meeting time change proposed Handeland proposed the NJU board consider changing its meeting time to 5:30 p.m. and perhaps a day change to Thursdays.

Fuel pricing, delivery

The Western Alaska Fuel Group has received several proposals in response for 2011 fuel supply and WAFG is continuing to evaluate and secure clarification on various pricing structures.

Before going into executive session, board member Pat Johansen quizzed Handeland about information on NJU going into the fuel delivery business. Handeland stated we still have fuel in our tanks and that would influence the fuel cost in our favor. He said fuel delivery is tabled at the attorney level and Bonanza Fuel wants to make NJU a presenta-

Johansen wants to get the raw numbers on the table to tell us if it is beneficial to be in the fuel delivery

Board member Fred Moody said that the current two delivery businesses get together and coordinate the charges and a third party selling fuel would lower the costs. "Our fuel cost at the pump does not make good sense," he said.

Berda Willson commented that, We represent the general public and the rate payer."

Johansen said, "Let's hear from Scott Henderson (Bonanza Fuel) and listen to his numbers.

Executive session

The board went into executive session to consider negotiation strategies for union labor contracts, the manger's contract, and fuel group proposals. Present at the meeting were Berda Willson, Fred Moody, Pat Johanson and David Barron, Carl Emmons was excused for medical

Susitna River hydro project creates controversy in downstream communities

By Diana Haecker

While Fairbanks, Anchorage, Palmer and Wasilla residents are excited about the prospect that a large hydro-powered power plant at the Susitna River would give them cheap electricity, residents of the small town of Talkeetna are fearing that the project may wreak havoc with fisheries, the area's hydrology and even threaten the existence of their town.

Talkeetna resident Arthur Mannix said that when the project was discussed in the 1980s, people in Talkeetna protested. Concerns were that a series of large dams, damming a glacial river and located on the Denali fault — a seismic active piece of real estate — would jeopardize the town when a dam failure would occur. A dam failure, they were told, would give the town's residents enough time to say a quick Hail Mary and run for the hills as the water breaking loose from the reservoirs located about 70 miles upriver would flood the low-lying community. Protests took the form of written testimony, tumultuous town hall meetings and even a theater play. The idea to build a major hydro project on the Susitna died back then due to the enormity of the project, its costs and the lack of customers for the produced electricity.

Now things look different with growth forecasted to triple the population living in the Mat-Su valley in a few years and the possibility of mines springing up near the railbelt with the promise of a rail connection to the new deep-water port at Point MacKenzie.

In this legislative session, the 50year-old idea to dam the Susitna River also surfaced again as the state is under pressure to come up with a means to supply the railbelt region of Alaska with 50 percent of renewable energy needs by the year 2025.

Governor Sean Parnell is actively pushing to make the Susitna Hydro project a reality and submitted a bill to the legislature that would authorize the Alaska Energy Authority to move forward with the project. Parnell said the project must go ahead to create new opportunities for economic development and jobs for Alaskans.

The proposed bill would put AEA in charge to acquire, construct, own and operate new power projects. It also proposes to end the existing Railbelt Energy Fund and to create a new Railbelt Energy Fund that would be controlled by AEA.

The governor's bill ,SB 42, is currently the Senate and will hear expert testimony and would give AEA sweeping authority to go ahead with environmental and feasibility studies and to seek preliminary approvals for the Su Dam project from the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission.

In the governor's proposed budget, he wants to fund the Susitna Hydro project with $65.7 million for planning, design and permitting.

The Su hydro project, as currently proposed, would dam the Susitna River at Watana. The dam would be more than 700 feet high, 2,700 feet in length and would create a 39-mile long reservoir. The dam would feed a powerhouse capable to handle the 600-megawatt output, and power lines would deliver the electricity via the large power Intertie to Fairbanks and all the way down to Anchorage and beyond. In a preliminary decision document published by AEA, the price tag of the project would run about $4.5 billion. The lifespan of the hydro project is estimated to be 50 to 100 years.

Karsten Rodvik, spokesman for AEA said that there is a great need for cost effective, reliable energy for the railbelt. When asked why Alaska considers building a significant hydro project and dam, when in the rest of the lower 48 states dams are taken down and dismantled, Rodvik said, "The ultimate goal is the establishment of long term, reliable, sustainable, affordable power on the railbelt. The alternatives are coal or

Brian Sullivan, a resident of Palmer, recently visited Talkeetna while on the campaign trail for his bid to become mayor of the Mat-Su Borough. When he casually mentioned what people thought of the Susitna project, he got an earful, relating to the potential dangers. Sullivan said the prospect of cheap, reliable power was a good enough argument. He said, until he heard Talkeetna residents voice their concerns, he, like many residents of the lower Matanuska-Susitna valley, never thought of the potential to

Alaska Airlines pulls away from Iditarod Trail Committee, channels support to mushers

By Diana Haecker

For 32 years Alaska Airlines has supported the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race by being one of the official airlines partner, but this year, the airline chose to support the sport of mushing in a different way.

Instead of providing cash and inkind contributions and being the presenter of the most coveted award, the Leonard Seppala Humanitarian Award, Alaska Airlines now channels its support directly to mushers.

According to Bobbie Egan, spokeswoman with Alaska Airlines, each finisher will receive a roundtrip ticket anywhere Alaska Airlines flies, each finisher and their dog teams, gear and sleds get a steep discount of 75 percent to be flown from Nome to Anchorage. And each finisher gets a special-made commemorative medallion from Alaska Airlines. "This, by far exceeds our prior support and it directly helps those on the forefront, the mushers," said Egan. "We are absolutely committed to dog mushing."

Asked the reasons why Alaska Airlines discontinued the sponsorship of the ITC organization, Egan said, "We believe this new sponsorship program expands our support of the Iditarod and most directly helps those at the forefront of the Last Great Race."

According to Iditarod executive director Stan Hooley, Alaska Airlines in the past supported the ITC with $15,000 in cash and roughly $45,000 in air travel for race veterinarians, officials, personnel and volunteers as well as freight. Hooley said that the ITC very much appreciated Alaska Airlines' support corporately as well as from its employees and the level of service they provided over the last 32 years. "We are sad that the relationship has ended for now," Hooley said. "I say 'for now.' Hopefully we have the opportunity to carve out another relationship in the future. We wanted to have Alaska Airlines grow with us." Hooley said that he is thrilled that Alaska Airlines chose to support the mushers.

The Iditarod made national headlines last week when the animal rights group People for Ethical Treatment of Animals spoiled an $85,000 deal between the ITC and the Transportation Security Administration. In order to boost their recruitment efforts in Alaska, TSA signed on as a "lead dog" partner with the Iditarod, but PETA inundated the federal agency with protests. TSA panicked and tried to cancel the agreement that was signed in November 2010. Hoolev said that the ITC learned of the issue when a Washington Post reporter called last week for a comment and only later did the ITC confirm with TSA that they indeed wanted out of the deal. But, Hooley said, that's not going to happen. "Our position is that they [TSA] have a binding financial obligation and they're going to have to meet that obligation whether or not they use the opportunities that came with it," said Hooley.

In response, Senators Mark Begich and Lisa Murkowski came to the Iditarod's defense and sent out letters to the head of TSA John Pistole. "It is outrageous the TSA would act on one complaint from a group with virtually no understanding of the Last Great Race on Earth," Begich wrote. He urged Pistole to contact real experts like Lance Mackey or DeeDee Jonrowe "to understand how sled dogs are trained and nurtured." Sen. Murkowski wrote in a letter to Pistole, "Despite what PETA says, the Iditarod is a race for animal lovers." She urged him to reconsider, as the Iditarod would represent a great opportunity for TSA recruitment to help overcome staffing challenges faced in Alaska.

But there are also positive developments to report, said Iditarod spokesman Chas St. George. Eagle Pack signed on as the official dog food sponsor and Donlin Creek LLC. a joint-venture between Barrick Gold and NovaGold Resources Inc. - the latter also owns the now idle Rock Creek mine in Nome - have signed on as a principal partner. Donlin Creek LLC plans to build a large gold mine on the upper Kuskokwim River and in order to supply the power a large mine would need, they propose to build a natural gas line from Cook Inlet up to the mine site. The gas line, if built as planned, would bisect a stretch of the Iditarod trail across the Alaska Range.

St. George said the sponsorship is a natural, because it reflects a historical relationship between mining and mushing.

The Iditarod's principal sponsors for 2011 are Anchorage Chrysler Dodge Jeep, Donlin Creek LLC, Exxon Mobil and GCI.

KTUU, Channel 2 News won't be in the finish chute this year. While KTUU has broadcast live from 2007 through 2010 from the finish line in Nome, St. George said, "We just simply couldn't come to an agreement. We looked at expanding our relationship with KTUU but is just didn't work out."

Instead, GCI, the official communications partner, is now also the broadcast partner and will transmit live on the GCI cable channel the start, restart and finish of the last great race. The video will also be streamed live online on the Iditarod Insider, which is exclusive to paying subscribers.

St. George said that the GCI expansion is a "big deal" for the Iditarod and that the ITC puts emphasis on outreach efforts with rural communities along the trail this year.

Nome science students take part in Arctic research

On a weekly basis, students at Anvil City Science Academy prepare themselves for winter weather, no matter what the conditions may bring. In a hallway strewn with winter gear, 22 students eagerly bundle up in snow pants, boots, hats, coats and gloves, as their science teacher Todd Hindman gathers the equipment they will need to achieve their goal. So what are they up to? Are they finding a good sled run, or perhaps working on a class project? Actually, it is a little of both.

Eight years ago, students at ACSA began working on a science research project entitled the ALISON Project. The ALISON (Alaska Lake Ice and Snow Observatory Network) Project is composed of a number of schools throughout Alaska in which students and teachers gain experience and knowledge in collecting scientific data to better understand the effect of fresh water lakes and ponds on Alaska's changing climate.

At the core of the project is Dr. Martin Jefferies, currently acting as the Program Officer and Arctic Science Advisor for the Office of Naval Research in Washington D.C. A decade ago, after his experience working with a classroom teacher from the lower 48 in the National Science Foundation's Teachers Experiencing Antarctica and the Arctic, Jefferies began contemplating how to engage classroom teachers and their students in polar science. He began talking with teachers like Todd Hindman to see if his idea was feasible. "Martin began to talk with me back in 2001 after I had the opportunity to participate in the TEA program. I indicated I was eager to get my students involved in a real-life scientific study." Soon thereafter, Dr. Jeffries began to create a network of teachers and students throughout the state to expand the work he had done previously in his research at the Geophysical Institute at the University of Alaska in Fairbanks. He concluded, "ALISON teachers and students could be our scientific partners. They could be scientists and do what many scientists enjoy — making measurements, generating scientifically useful data and learning about the environment they live in."

To set up each study site, Dr. Jeffries then began to make his way around the state, including a stop in Nome. "I will probably always remember my first visit to Nome to help set up the ALISON site in late November 2002. The weather was miserable — it was raining, the wind was blowing and the snow on the ice was quickly turning to slush and worse — but five damp people finished the task. I was very pleased to sit down afterwards and enjoy an extra hot café latte at the coffee shop on Front Street."

Now, during each fall in Nome, preparations for the study begin as soon as a sufficient thickness of ice, 10 to 15 centimeters, has developed on a pond near ACSA. This year in late November, after eliciting the help of parents and students to set up the study site for the year, Todd Hindman and parent volunteer Andrew Merrill spent a small part of a sunny, cold afternoon to set up the 100-meter long transect. The transect, composed of 21 trail stakes set apart at five meter intervals. includes an ingenious device called a TWIT, or Thermal Wire Ice Thickness gauge, to measure the thickness of the ice without the need to cut through the ice with an auger. With the study site set up, students were ready to begin collection of their weekly data.

Using relatively simple science equipment and sampling techniques, students measure the depth of the snow at each trail marker, as well as the temperature at the surface of the ice below the snow pack. At each end of the transect, students measure the temperature at the surface of the snow pack. They also collect three snow samples at even intervals along the transect to determine the density of the snow. After these measurements are taken and the thickness of the ice is determined, the data is put into a spreadsheet. The spreadsheet determines the temperature gradient, or difference in the temperature between the water, ice, and air, as well as the rate of heat flow, or thermal conductivity, through the snow. Each plays a role in the amount of energy that is released to the atmosphere as the ice continues to thicken over the winter.

At the university level, Dr. Jeffries hopes that the data collected by students will help him and other researchers understand the role fresh water ponds and lakes have on the climate of Alaska as they freeze over the winter, through the development and testing of computer models. He also wants the program to lead to further collaboration between teachers, who tend to be isolated in their work. Todd Hindman agrees that collaboration is an important part of the program and states, "The ALSION Project has given me the opportunity to work with teachers throughout the state to create a unique opportunity for my students they would not have gotten otherwise."

At the school level, Mr. Hindman believes that the experience has given the students a better understanding of how energy is transferred throughout the environment. while acknowledging that not all students may be able to completely understand the concepts. "Having a fifth of sixth grader understand the relationship between a temperature gradient and thermal conductivity is not my goal. My goal is to give the students the opportunity to be involved in an actual scientific study, get them out of the classroom and into the real world, and have a little fun at the same time." Mr. Hindman adds, "With that said, students complete lab investigations every other year in a effort to reinforce the science behind the study and by the time they complete the eighth grade they can provide a good explanation of the project."

Early on, about 14 schools joined the network and began collecting data on Alaska's ice and snow. Nine years later, there remains a group of seven dedicated schools and their teachers who continue to engage students in the collection of ice and snow data for his research, despite the fact that funding for the program lapsed two years ago. Dr. Jeffries is pleased to see that schools continue to participate and reflects on their participation. "Since November 2002, Hindman's enthusiasm for ALISON and its value for his students mean that the Anvil City Science Academy contribution to ALISON has gone from strength to strength. They are now at the beginning of their ninth winter of measurements and on their way to creating a valuable long-term data set." He is satisfied not only with the scientific data that has been collected but by the effect it has had on students and classroom teachers alike.

"Our experience at Nome and elsewhere in the ALISON network shows that, with appropriate training, guidance and support, K-12 students can make accurate measurements and be good scientists." He adds, "ALI-SON students and teachers are learning science by doing science in their own backyard, where they are making measurements of familiar and abundant materials — snow and ice."

ROCKING—Singer/songwriter Tim Easton (right) plays an energetic number with drummer Kliff Hopson at a concert Feb. 11 at Nome Elementary School.

Two-man band rocks Nome

Tim Easton, Kliff Hopson bring unique sound to town

With a bit of a rasp to his voice and performances that could jump from searing to soothing, singer/songwriter Tim Easton ventured from southern California to bring a little warmth to Nome last weekend

Brought to town by the Nome Arts Council, Easton and Fairbanks drummer Kliff Hopson performed an evening show at Nome Elementary School Friday night and delivered a late-night concert at the Board of Trade Saloon Saturday. Hopson and Easton also dropped in to perform for and talk music with fifth and sixth graders at the elementary school on Friday and hosted a set of workshops for Nome musicians over the weekend.

Easton is no stranger to Alaska, but was making his first visit to Nome. Hopson is a familiar face around town after traveling to Nome last winter to play for the One Voice event featuring Nome divas Sarah Hanson, Bridie Trainor, Anahma Saito and Laura Davis. Members of the Nome Arts Council took notice of Easton at the Alaska Folk Festival in Juneau last year and started hatching a plan to bring him to town.

The shows in Nome did not disappoint. When together Easton and Hopson put on shows that sound as if an entire five-piece band were on stage rocking away. Easton can drive a bass line from the lower strings of his guitar while finger picking melodic runs and rollicking solos. Watching Easton's every move, Hopson compliments some songs with light brushwork on his drum set, and then shares the driver's seat on others as he hammers his kit through crescendos and solos.

Easton delivered a variety of songs, nearly all original works. Much of his performance was well rooted in the blues, but he twisted and turned the genre to make it his own. Some songs were unapologetically pop in style, but delivered so earnestly and energetically you couldn't help but enjoy the ride.

Even though he was far from home, performing in a strange town that was reeling from its first blast of -25°F weather, Nome audiences had to believe Easton was enjoying the ride too as he repeated the refrain "I'm not in a bad mood, I'm just in Los Angeles," from his song "North-Bound." Worlds away from Los Angeles, the Nome audiences could only smile along and dance as Easton ran through the refrain one

Best selling children's author visits Nome schools

Submitted by Nome Literacy Council

This past weekend, Nome was proud to welcome author Brandon Mull. Brandon Mull is the author of The New York Times bestselling Fablehaven series and The Candy Shop War, as well as other titles for a wide range of reading ages.

In addition to his writing, Mull travels the country visiting schools and talking with students about his message, "Imagination can take you places." Mull gave a total of four presentations to students at the Nome Elementary School, Nome Beltz Jr. High, and the Anvil City Science Academy. Mull joined the 56ers for a special lunch for those students who had read the first of his Fablehaven series. These presentations focused on writing, creativity, imagination, and encouraging children to persevere in following their dreams. Fourth grader Christopher Gandia said, "I liked how he helped us use our imagination." During Mull's presentation, he called students out of the crowd to help demonstrate creativity. Courtney Merchant said, "He told us to use our imagination." The students then played an Imagination Game with Mull to see how easy it is to create a story.

Mull's past stints as comedian and world traveler were evident in his humorous and vivid delivery, which proved a big hit with the students.

Mull also showed students how his books got published. Ethan Ahkvaluk said, "He showed us part of his book where he typed and people fixed his mistakes." Mull showed the students how his editors make changes and corrections to his books before they are published, and encouraged them to learn from the comments that teachers give to them on their own writing assignments.

Gabrielle Mostellor commented after Mull's visit that she liked when he told the students how to become an author. The students weren't the only people in Nome that Mull talked with about becoming a writer. Mull also met with Nome Arts Council members, and discussed the publishing process.

The Nome Arts Council, along with the Nome Literacy Council and the PTSA were involved in bringing Mull to Nome. Literacy Council members Joy Hewitt and Marsha Sloan wrote a Teen Literacy Mini-Grant that was funded by the Alaska State Literacy Council. The Arts Council and PTSA helped pick up the additional costs of Mull's visit. Arrangements and all event planning were done by Marguerite La Riviere, director of the Kegoayah Kozga Public Library, in cooperation with the public school libraries of the Mat-Su Valley.

In addition to his visits to the school, Mull took a dog sled ride, a snowmachine ride to view musk ox, and enjoyed a "taste of Nome" potluck, that included fry bread, salmon, reindeer, muktuk and sura, as well as Nome's favorite - Blueberry Delight - hosted by Nancy and Johnny Bahnke. "He came to my house for dinner, and he was nice," said Brayden Bahnke of Mull's visit. "I liked that he read his 'Humpty Dumpty' story to us out loud." Mull did a special reading at the Potluck for the children in attendance and legends of the Bering Strait region. Mull mentioned that he is always incorporating things from his own life into his stories, and told the students that they live in a rich community, full of opportunities to incorporate their life experiences into their own stories. It will be interesting to see if any of Mull's Nome experiences show up in a future book.

Mull was interested in the stories

2011 Subsistence Crab Permit-Calendar

A reminder to all subsistence crab fishermen that a Norton Sound subsistence crab permit-calendar is required when crabbing in waters from Cape Romanzof to 66 N latitude (south of Shishmaref). Permits are free and available by calling 1-800-560-2271, or can be picked up at Fish & Game in Nome.

A sport fish license may be used to crab, but a catch permit-calendar is still required. Sport fishermen are limited to 6 male crabs a day that are 4<sup>3/4</sup> inches or more at carapace (shell).

There is no catch or size limit for subsistence fishermen and female crabs may also be kept.

No cash sales of crab are allowed, but subsistence caught crabs may be bartered.

Winter permits are valid from December 1 - May 31.

Please have your Alaska I.D. number when calling.

Marine Advisory specialist floats idea for fishermen training program

By Doug Schneider Alaska Sea Grant Program

Fishermen in Alaska represent the state's largest group of small business owners. But there is some graying going on—the median age of Alaska's commercial fishermen is now close to 50.

Add to that the flight of limited entry permits from coastal residents to people outside the region and even outside the state, and the general consolidation of the state's pollock, crab and salmon fishing fleets that has occurred in recent years, and people like Glenn Haight begin to think there might be fewer fishing jobs for people in Alaska's coastal communities in the future. Haight is a fisheries business specialist with the Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advi-

"Yet, the jobs that remain have become more valuable and profitable for fishermen," said Haight.

But who will get those better paying jobs? Haight said it likely would be the people best prepared to do them. To help Alaska coastal communities prepare their residents for the fishing jobs of the future, the Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program is floating the idea of a professional fisherman's training program at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

"It might be that a formal occupational endorsement program can help fishermen succeed in a rapidly changing global economy," said Haight. "But we'd like to know what fishermen, coastal residents and others involved in the industry have to say about it."

To find out what fishermen and coastal residents think of a training program for fishermen, the Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program has put together an online survey. Take the online survey at http://www.surveymonkey.com/s/ CommercialFishingTrainingProgram

"Basically we're asking whether a university training program is needed, and if so what should be in it, and would such a program actually improve the chances of a young person getting a position as a crew member?" Haight said.

Traditionally, fishing skills have been learned on the job, often from family members passing down their knowledge to the next generation. Currently, there is no formal training program in Alaska that supports the professional development of fishermen. A training program for fishermen might look similar to the occupational training for carpenters, electricians, aircraft mechanics, nurses, health aides and other job training programs now run by the University of Alaska.

"Such a program could be tailored for the individual," Haight said. "For an individual with no experience, it might have an apprenticeship element, where students would work alongside veteran fishermen. For someone with experience, it might focus more attention on advanced mechanics or engine repair, for ex-

Protecting your family from RSV

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

RSV season has returned to rural Alaska. The Respiratory Syncytial Virus (RSV) is one of the more troublesome causes of wintertime illness. It leads to more deep-chest infections in children than any other pathogen, including the flu, and has a unique way of breaking down the normally robust immune system of adults. For this reason, knowing a little more about RSV can help you and your family deal more effectively with this seasonal threat.

In children, RSV starts as a head cold with fever, runny nose, and a decreased appetite. The virus then tracks down the respiratory tract into the lungs over the course of several days causing a severe cough often associated with wheezing. The worst part of the RSV illness lasts 3 to 4 days; however, many children continue to have a cough for several weeks, and some may have wheezing issues for several years.

Almost all children have had their first RSV infection by age 3. Severe pneumonia and bronchiolitis from RSV occurs in only a small percentage of young patients. For most children RSV is not dangerous and serves as a type of infectious disease right-of-passage.

There is no way to precisely predict which children are at risk of more severe disease. We know that infants with underlying lung or heart disease are at the greatest risk. Last month, the journal Pediatrics published data showing that in addition to this, day care attendance, having siblings in the home, having parents with an advanced education, having a birth weight over 8.8 pounds, and being born between April and September conferred a higher risk of severe lower respiratory tract disease in otherwise healthy children.

RSV can be dangerous for newborns and very dangerous for extremely preterm infants born before 32 weeks gestation or babies with congenital heart disease. High-risk children, like those with severe underlying heart or lung disease, are often given a special antibody shot during the RSV season to boost their immune system against the respiratory syncytial virus.

Re-infection with RSV can occur at any age, but symptoms tend to become less severe with age. In adults, the virus is usually confined to the nasal cavity and sinuses, and though it does not usually affect the lungs, it causes an upper respiratory illness that is stronger and lasts longer than the common cold, sometimes persisting 7 to 10 days.

The respiratory syncitial virus (RSV) is transmitted by contact with infected secretions, like shaking hands with people that have just sneezed into their hands or playing with a toy covered with the phlegm of an infected toddler. RSV prevention is one of the most important reasons for people to wash their hands regularly.

Here are some guidelines for caring for a child or family member with RSV:

•Wash hands, toys, and utensils regularly.

• Keep ill persons home from public settings like day care, school, church, or the store.

• Stay hydrated. Children may benefit from warm vegetable-based broth or soup. Babies should continue to breast feed or be given formula at regular intervals using a bulb suction to help clear nasal passages when mucus build up hampers feeding.

• Keep infected persons away from second-hand smoke.

• Acetaminophen (Tylenol) or ibuprofen (Motrin) may be used for comfort.

• A bronchodilator like albuterol is occasionally needed for children with wheezing associated with RSV. Antibiotics are rarely needed unless a secondary infection, like an ear infection or bacterial pneumonia, develops from the RSV infection.

• Be patient. RSV lasts longer than most other childhood illnesses.

• See your doctor if signs of serious disease develop including difficulty breathing, extreme lethargy, or trouble keeping down food or fluids.

Saying it Sincerely

By Rev. Julie Yoder Elmore on behalf of The Nome Ministerial Association Scripture Reference: Luke 13:10-17

She had no name. She had been bent over, unable to stand up straight for 18 years. Jesus was speaking in the front of the synagogue. She was in the back of the synagogue with the other women – perhaps farther back than anyone because of her deformity. Her faith brought her to the temple. She did not run to Jesus, she was simply there. Jesus noticed her. He was in the place of most power in the synagogue. She is in the place of least power in the synagogue. He went to her. He healed her – unbound what Satan had bound up 18 years earlier. She immediate stood up and praised God! Jesus had set her free!

The synagogue leader was furious. How could Jesus heal, in other words work, on the Sabbath? Did he not know the rules that one was not to work on the Sabbath? It was even in the Ten Commandments found in Exodus 20:9 and Leviticus 19:30. Who does Jesus think he is?

Jesus was the Son of God and also God in human flesh. Jesus came to earth not to abolish the law, but to fulfill it, according to Matthew 5:17. At times Jesus proved the point that sometimes relationships are more important than the rules. The woman in the synagogue had been afflicted for 18 years. It was high time that she be healed and relieved of her suffering. Satan's control of her had to end. Why should she have to continue to suffer just because she happened to encounter Jesus on the Sabbath?

I see this story as challenge for us. Rules are important for bringing order to a society or a group. Many find comfort in rules because there is predictability and clear lines as to what is expected between one person and another. When those boundaries get blurry, we get nervous. The synagogue leader was getting nervous that Jesus was acting outside the rules, outside the boundaries. Others see rules as something to be broken and break them just to spite others. This was not the case with Jesus. Jesus saw someone who had a need and knew that he could care for her. It did not matter what day it was, this woman had suffered enough in her life and needed to be healed today. God was glorified through Jesus' healing to the woman. Not only was God glorified, but this was an opportunity for Jesus to convey that even the least of these deserve God's attention and care. When do the rules prevent us from serving our neighbor as God calls us to do? It is often the least of these who are oppressed by the rules. How do we release them in Christ's name? Sometimes we may have to bend the rules.

Yukon Quest crowns rookie champion

Willow rookie and third-generation musher Dallas Seavey won the Yukon Quest last week. Second to cross the finish line was Sebastian Schnuelle. Ken Anderson, Brent Sass and Kelley Griffin round out the top five. For most of the grueling race, Hugh Neff were leading the pack, but his team didn't cross Eagle Summit and he ended up mushing to the road, where he had his team trucked to the next checkpoint. He was withdrawn from the race. Out of 25 mushers who started, 13 finished the race. The last musher arrived on Friday night. Nine mushers scratched, three were withdrawn. Seavey won the Rookie of the Year award. Brent Sass's dog "Silver" was the recipient of a new award named after him, for exhibiting strong character. The Golden Harness award went to Seavey's dogs Diesel and Chung. The Challenge of the North award went to Kelley Griffin and Mike Ellis received the Veterinarian's Choice award. Results: 1 Dallas Seavey 10 days 11h 53m; 2. Sebastian Schnuelle 10d 12h 26m; 3. Ken Anderson 10d 14h 24m; 4. Brent Sass 10d 19h 2m; 5. Kelley Griffin 11d 3h 2m; 6. Allen Moore 11d 7h 32m; 7. ## Trooper Beat

On 2/19/11 at approximately 1900 hours, Alaska State Troopers responded to multiple com-plaints of Mabel Mitchell, 31, and her live-in boyfriend, Ralph Stalker, 36, shouting obscenities at one another and challenging each other to fight on the VHF frequency utilized by the residents of the Village of Selawik. The VHF frequency is the primary means by which residents of the village communicate with one and another, particularly those that can not afford telephone services. It is also the primary means by which residents of the also the primary means by which residents or the village request assistance for emergencies. At approximately 8:28 p.m. after Troopers and Vil-lage Police Officers made multiple requests for Mitchell and Stalker to terminate their disruptive and obscene challenges to one another on the VILLE traces. Traces controlled and when VHF frequency, Troopers contacted and subsequently arrested them. Both Mitchell and Stalker were found to be highly intoxicated at the time of their arrests. Both were charged with Disorderly Conduct and are currently being held at the Vil-lage Public Safety Office awaiting arraignment due to blizzard conditions preventing flights to Kotzebue. The Village of Selawik is a Local Option Dry Community.

On 2/19/2011 at approximately 3 a.m. Village Police Officers responded to a report of juveniles consuming alcohol at a residence belonging to Percy Clark, 20, of Selawik. Percy Clark had been previously contacted by Alaska State Troopbeen previously contacted by Alaska State Troopers for hosting a juvenile "fight club" at his residence, which earned notoriety on YouTube. Further investigation revealed that Clark as well as a 16-year-old male juvenile and a 17-year-old female juvenile were present at the residence, along with Jody Sheldon, 20. Both juveniles and Sheldon were intoxicated.

When Sheldon, who was currently on conditions of Release/Felony Probation for Theft II, was contacted by the VPO, Sheldon fled the area on a snowmachine. Sheldon was also to be with his Court Approved Third Parties, Sharon Sheldon, 43, or Jessica Sheldon, 22 (both were not pres ent). At approximately noon, VPO confirmed that Jody was not at his residence, not with his Court Approved Third Parties, and neither Sharon nor Jessica had attempted to contact law enforcement as directed by the Kotzebue Court. Jody was late as directed by the Kotzebue Court. Jody was later located and arrested at approximately 6 p.m., by VPO, for Violating the conditions of his release. At approximately 6:40 p.m. Jessica was contacted and subsequently arrested by Troopers at a separate residence. Shortly afterwards, at approximately 7 p.m. Troopers contacted a highly intoxicated Sharon Sheldon and arrested her at a family member's residence. Both Jessica and Sharon were charged with Violating Custodian's Duties. Clark was later arrested at approximately 8:20 p.m. for Contributing to the Delinquency of 8:20 p.m. for Contributing to the Delinguency of Minors (x2). The two juveniles were issued summons to appear in the Kotzebue Courthouse for Minor Consuming Alcohol (x2). Jody, Sharon, and Jessica were remanded to the Kotzebue Regional Jail awaiting arraignment. Clark is awaiting arraignment in the Village of Selawik Public Safety. On 2/20/11 at approximately 9:10 a.m. the Alaska State Troopers in St. Mary's were notified of a house fire in Mtn. Village. Investigation revealed that at approximately 6:15 a.m. VPSO Tobeliuk responded to a residence in Mtn. Village that was fully engulfed in flames. At that time all occupants were out of the home. A 7-year-old child was able to exit the residence along with the parents who were highly intoxicated at the time. The investigation continues. Charges will be filed with the Bethel District Attorney's Office.
On 2-19-11 at 8:09 a.m., the Alaska State

Troopers received a report of a domestic distur-bance in Savoonga. Subsequent investigation led to the arrest of Randy Annogiyuk, 23 of Savoonga, for Assault 4, Criminal Mischief 5, and Probation Violation. Annogiyuk was remanded to the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center.

On 2/17/11 at about 3 p.m. the Shishmaref VPSO received a report that 49 year old Frank Ongtowasruk and a 5-year-old girl had not returned home after Ongtowasruk picked the girl up at school. The reporter said Mr. Ongtowasruk picked the girl up at school at 2 p.m. and was to have snowmachined home right away. The reporter also said Ongtowasruk was not dressed for the weather which was blowing snow with low visibility. Numerus volunteers started searching implicitly. ibility. Numerous volunteers started searching imibility. Numerous volunteers started searching informediately for Ongtowasruk and his passenger, checking around the village and the lagoon trail meeting with negative results. At about 5 p.m. Ongtowasruk and his passenger made it to their home in Shishmaref in good condition. As we race the Iron Dog again this year, we'd like to raise awareness of suicide prevention in Alaska. We've got one of the highest rates in the nation, but it doesn't have to be that

For a while it was pretty normal to be going to funerals for suicide for me, Tyler, growing up in Galena. I lost my uncle, brother, close friends in high school, after high school, my great-great-grandpa. It seems like people feel like they're in a standstill in life – they don't have a job, they're not going to school, they get depressed.

When you're not moving, you need to get moving, because life is bigger than right now, right where you're at. When you're at a low point in life, hang on and keep moving forward. When you fall off your snowmachine, you get back on and keep

When I, Chris, raced the Iron Dog in 2009, a lot of things went wrong. I think a lot of guys would've given up at that point in their careers. I'm glad I didn't, because the next year, Tyler and I won.

Editor's note: The following letter was submitted prior to Feb. 3 by The Nome Nugget to the council but was omitted from the council packet on Feb. 14.

Dear members of the Nome Board of Education and Nome Common Council:

I am writing in regard to the planned joint meeting for Feb. 3, 2011 between the board and council, and wish to express my concerns.

My first concern it that the meeting be properly noticed for both boards, since a quorum from each body will likely be present. The public should have a clear explanation as to why the two governing bodies are

My larger concern is over the prospect of this meeting, or a portion thereof, being held in executive session. If the joint meeting is meant to discuss the Nome Board of Education's handling of the superintendent's contract, I question the authority of the Nome Common Council to call a meeting on the issue in the first place, let alone a closeddoor session.

The citizenry of Nome did not elect Nome Common Council members to decide the matters of the school district. The members of the Nome Board of Education were elected by a majority of resident voters and, whether one agrees with them or not, they acted within their bounds in their handling of the superintendent contract. While healthy dialogue between the two bodies should be encouraged, neither independently elected board is required to answer to the other.

The common council has no business participating in a closed-door discussion over how the school board executes its personnel decisions. I would raise the same objection if the school board called an executive session to discuss the common council's evaluation of the city manager. The Nome Common Council has no say over the superintendents' contract, so why should it be permitted to meet with the school board in private to discuss the mat-

I have heard that a concern over legal issues may serve as the justification for the common council calling an executive session in this matter. Unless a lawsuit has been filed or notification has been given of a real and legitimate threat to do so, mere worry that the school board's actions may provoke a lawsuit does not meet the legal standard required for calling an executive session. If this were the case, one could argue executive sessions would be warranted for nearly every decision a government body makes for fear that those who may oppose the body's decision would pursue litigation. If anything, I believe the common council inserting itself into another independent governmental entity's business, and insisting that it be done in private, only increases the city's liability in regard to litigation or sanction.

I have also heard that concern over adverse financial impacts to the city could be used as justification for a closed session. Again I find this reasoning to be false. While the city provides state-required and additional funding to the district, it does not have the power to direct Nome Public Schools in how those funds are used. A lawsuit against the district will not change how much money the state requires the city to provide Nome Public Schools, and any funding above that requirement is at the city's discretion.

For the stated reasons above, I respectfully ask that any discussion between the Nome Board of Education and the Nome Common Council be properly noticed and held in public. I am sorry I will be out of town and unable to attend the Feb. 3 meeting. Regards,

Tyler Rhodes Nome, AK

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN THE REGULATIONS OF THE ALASKA DEPARTMENT OF FISH AND GAME

The Alaska Department of Fish and Game (ADF&G) proposes to adopt regulation changes in Title 5 of the Alaska Administrative Code, dealing with waters important for the spawning, rearing, or migration of anadromous fish, including the following:

5 AAC 95.011 is proposed to be changed as

The Atlas to the Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadromous Fishes and Catalog of Waters Important for the Spawning, Rearing, or Migration of Anadromous Fishes (Atlas and Catalog), which are adopted by reference in 5 AAC 95.011, will be revised and updated.

Alaska Statute 16.05.871 requires, among other actions, that the Commissioner of the ADF&G "specify" the rivers, lakes and streams or portions of them that are important for the spawning, rearing or migration of anadromous fish. The Commissioner must review plans and specifications of any proposed work or use occurring within a specified anadromous river, lake, or stream. If the Commissioner determines that the plans and commissioner determines that the plans and specifications provide for the proper protection of fish and game the project will be approved and a Fish Habitat Permit will be issued by the ADF&G, Division of Habitat. The Catalog and Atlas identify and list these anadromous waters and are used by the Commissioner to determine whether such a permit is required for any particular project.

Walrus deemed in peril, but ESA listing postponed

By Diana Haecker

Last week a long awaited decision came out of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service office, saying that the Pacific walrus warrants protection under the Endangered Species Act. But at the same time the ruling says that protection is currently precluded because the agency needs to address other higher priority species. USFWS says that the walrus is added to the list of candidates for ESA protection, on which it can stay indefinitely, and that its status would be reviewed on a year-to-year basis.

A warranted but precluded finding means that the best available information makes it necessary that the species be listed, but that a listing is not possible due to inadequate agency resources and other priori-

The USFWS found that sufficient data exist to warrant protecting the Pacific walrus under the ESA. Their review found that walrus are indeed threatened by the loss of sea ice in its Arctic habitat due to climate change. "The threats to the walrus are very real, as evidenced by this 'warranted' finding," said Geoff Haskett, USFWS's director of the Alaska Region. "But its greater population numbers and ability to adapt to landbased haul-outs make its immediate situation less dire than those facing other species such as the polar bear."

The polar bear was listed as a threatened species.

Pacific walrus are currently protected by the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

According to USFWS, Pacific walrus have shown an ability to use land-based haul-outs when sea ice is unavailable, and to use those haulouts to rest between feeding periods offshore. The agency says that over time, walrus would be forced to rely on haul-outs on land to a greater extent. And this would expose all individuals, but especially calves, juveniles and females, to increased levels of stress from depletion of prey, trampling and predation. While the current subsistence harvest of Pacific walrus by Alaska Natives is believed to be sustainable, if sea ice loss occurs as expected, the current level of subsistence harvest would become a threat in the foreseeable future, says the agency.

Several thousand young walruses were killed in stampedes in Russia in 2007, and 133 young walruses perished in a stampede in Alaska in

In 2008, the Center for Biological Diversity petitioned the Department of the Interior to list the Pacific walrus under the ESA. Reacting to the news that USFWS found reason to list walrus as endangered or threatened but then didn't followthrough with a listing, Shaye Wolf with the Center said that "Our government's decision to indefinitely delay protection increases the odds that we might lose walruses forever. If instead we give the walrus the full benefits of the Endangered Species Act and reduce carbon dioxide to a safe level below 350 parts per million, we can protect the walrus and the Arctic is also threatened by proposed offshore oil drilling in Alaskan waters where an oil spill in ice-filled waters would be impossible to clean up. The Obama administration is currently deciding whether to permit drilling in the heart of walrus habitat in the Chukchi Sea off Alaska. Listing the walrus under the Endangered Species Act, along with the protection of its critical habitat, would make approval of this drilling more difficult.

Wolf said that the Pacific walrus

Doug Vincent-Lang with the Alaska Department of Fish and Game said that while the State of Alaska appreciates the decision by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service to not list the Pacific walrus under the ESA at this time, the state disagrees with the finding that the listing of the Pacific walrus under the ESA is warranted at this time. "While we concur with the Service that walrus habitat may change over the next 25-50 years, available information about life history characteristics, previous experience with warming climates, and Atlantic walrus ecosystem corollaries suggests that walrus will be able to adapt to these conditions. While the walrus population may decline in response to a smaller carrying capacity, the resultant population will not be threatened with extinction within the next 25-50 years and therefore the decision that listing is warranted is unnecessary at this time." Vincent-Lang, the State's Endangered Species Coordinator

Vincent-Lang added that the state would work with the USFWS Service to examine additional measures that could be implemented to assure the long-term conservation of Pacific

The State of Alaska has budgeted nearly $1.4 million for litigation, appeals and challenges related to the federal Endangered Species Act this fiscal year, reports AP. Attorney General John J. Burns held a presentation in front of lawmakers and said that the largest chunks of those $1.4 million have been directed to fight ESA designations of Stellar sea lions, beluga whales and polar bears. Burns says a comparable sum is budgeted for the next fiscal year, which begins

• Nomeites' views on state office building

ing locals not to build in the plain yet demanding that the State of Alaska to do just that.

• I think it is important to keep Front Street alive. The house next to The Nome Nugget needs to either be remodeled or torn down. Maybe there should [be] a vacancy ordinance. Where a building is vacant for more than three to five years if it doesn't meet certain criteria some measures should be taken. Earlier I mentioned that the Iditarod is very important to Nome and right next to the finish line we have abandoned buildings. It doesn't paint a positive picture of Nome.

• Front Street is an eyesore now—why is there such a big push to keep Front Street vital when I do not even want to bring my children there except for the post office?

The post office and courthouse are going to be very difficult to get to if we have to walk all the way out to the new hospital. Many people do not have cars. The state building, and things that people don't have to visit on a daily basis could move and no one would notice.

- If we create Front Street like a red light district like in bourbon street in New Orleans, maybe we'll have more a tourist draw as it would be unique. Create more spaces so people can sit down and watch the happenings on Front Street as well. I would like to see the development of a park so we can sit down and have a picnic with nice tables, toilets, and the like.
- · Has anyone asked the employees of the state building how they like working in [an] inadequate building and a few people don't want them in a new building that the state will pay for, just stay where you are and deal with it? Heck if I will pay for a new building on Front Street from city taxes. If Front Street wants to be the focal point, then have small businesses occupy spots and make it like any other small town and their "main street" has all the local shops.

• Front Street is an important resource for this community.... Not just because of the economic/commercial buildings, but because of the tourism and development issues. It is the public "face" of our community – our visitors projected during Iditarod, etc.... It is like we have abandoned Front Street, especially after AC moved out. Now I hear parents won't even let their children go to the public library because of the behaviors associated with Front Street. Instead of abandoning it to the drunks, why are we not encouraging more development. Communities in the Lower 48 have had gentrification projects for run down neighborhoods..

- Front Street is has-been. Even bars are moving off of Front Street now. Anyone with sense knows it is a bad place to locate a business. Why do we expect the state and federal governments to put buildings in places where the private sector has already decided it's a bad idea (except for Subway; it is the only exception to that and I'm not sure why).
- This is extremely important. Without our traditional Front Street businesses there is a lack of community gathering places and historical unity. For such a small place as Nome this is essential. Also: It is important to do something with the disgraceful places on Front Street with little or no involvement. Example: Wien Building.
- With the fire hall, hospital, both grocery stores, and all the hardware, lumber and snow machine shops nearer to city field, then Front Street the center of town has already shifted. Even for population, the center of town is closer to city field than the ocean. The only people who don't seem to understand how far Front Street has strayed from the center of town is the government. Maybe everyone in government has cars already and don't need to walk anywhere.
- If Front Street is to remain Nome's Main St., I think it would be more important to keep these types of buildings and services on Front St. than the run down buildings, houses, and bars.

- It depends on what kind of other improvements are and can be designed for downtown. Will there be a walking only area like many European cities and town[s]? Then sure. Is it going to stay the same as it is with everyone driving anyway? Then why promote congestion on Front Street? The entire town can adapt to being more spread out. Sentiments are not a good enough reason to stifle development.
- Front Street and downtown should remain the focus of Nome's business and government district. Many people in Nome walk, and downtown is convenient for the bank, post office, utilities, and some shopping. Don't screw it up! Please.
- I was unaware that the state building is an essential office...actually, the only building that you list there that I frequent is the post office. The government should be bound by the same economic principles that dictate the private sector. Build where it makes sense. Just because state or federal money is paying for it doesn't mean that a building should be located on a more expensive property.
- I see the value of having professional offices located on Front Street. Without them, it would be trashed with litter/bottles/cans/raw sewer.
- I think the city needs to look ahead. The sea is going to increasingly take its toll. The whole city should move back from the coast and not waste money fighting mother nature. In 50 years Front Street will be gone due to rising water and erosion. No sense putting any more new buildings on Front Street.
- Where else would they go? Front Street is a consolidated commercial hub for town; it makes sense to keep it that way.
- This issue involves excessive conflicts of interest for city officials.

and partner Andy George were the closest team to Nome as they took their required layover in Kaltag. The duo pushed farther than any of the other front-running teams to take their 10-hour layover in the last possible location. Racers are required to take three layovers on their way to Nome. Racers can choose between three different stops for each layover

But being the farthest along the trail didn't necessarily mean being in first place as a truckload of talent was resting on layover in Galena and Ruby. Of those teams waiting to take the trail approximately 100 miles behind West and George were Tyler Huntington and Chris Olds, the 2010 champions-and judging by the clock Monday night-part of the tight pack that formed the race's true frontrunners. Olds and Huntington arrived in Galena at 3:28 p.m. Monday, meaning they could saddle up and get back on course around 1:30 a.m. on Tuesday. West and George didn't arrive in Galena until 4:50 p.m., nearly an hour and a half after Huntington and Olds had declared their layover there.

When Huntington and Olds arrived in Galena on their Polaris Rush 600s, they had company breathing down their neck. Legendary rider Scott Davis and his son, Cory Davis, blazed into Galena a mere two minutes behind last year's champs. It only took seven more minutes before veterans Doug Dixon and Wayne Wold piloted their Arctic Cats into town. Twelve minutes after that both team No. 21 of Matthew Spernak and David Branholm and team No. 2 of Andrew Zwink and Ryan Sottosanti would arrive. All in all, five leading teams piled into Galena over the course of 20 minutes.

While Galena housed several contenders, it was impossible to ignore what was going on in Ruby, 52 miles back on the trail. There waited Iron Dog heavyweights Marc McKenna and Dusty Van Meter riding as a team and the duo of Todd Palin and Eric Quam. The four racers who held 10 championships among them rode into Ruby like a traffic jam with Hunting and Olds in the mix. Palin and Quam, and McKenna and Van Meter all could have possibly started riding again at 12:30 a.m. Tuesday.

While all those teams were holed up and resting, the only other Nomeites on the course this year were still making their way toward Ruby-the first place they could have the option of parking the machines and declaring their layover. Team No. 23 made up of Cliff Johnson and Stacey Green still had approximately 60 miles to go before hitting the Poorman checkpoint and then another 72 miles until Ruby, judging by the race's GPS tracking system as the clock struck midnight Tuesday morning. This is Green's first Iron Dog. Johnson raced in 2009, scratching in Nome.

With so many top-tier racers spread out between the three possible layover spots, even hazarding a guess at who would make it to Nome first was a worthless endeavor. While skill and experience go a long way in making Iron Dog champions, there is also a fair amount of the race that is left to chance. Nearly every race winner also has a string of runs were they finished well out of the money or they didn't see the finish line at all

Several teams had already seen their races come to an early end due to injury or mechanical failure. Past champs Todd Minnick and Nick Olstad were forced to scratch just after the race's start when Minnick was thrown from his machine at high speed and suffered a leg injury. According to the Iron Dog's website, Minnick was recovering "without any life-threatening injuries," but the crash was enough to end the duo's race.

Another handful of racers had to bow out by Monday night with mechanical problems. An unconfirmed report said team No. 8 of Tyler Aklestad and Tyson Johnson had to bow out after an engine fire burnt an oil line on one of their machines. Unaware that the line was toast, the duo rode off only to seize an engine. Johnson and Aklestad have both raced to runner-up honors twice in their Iron Dog careers.

Teams were expected to start arriving in Nome by the later afternoon or evening Tuesday. Racers get an extended layover in Nome, complete with a banquet Wednesday night before hitting the trail again Thursday. The race is expected to finish on Saturday in downtown Fairbanks.

Proving their 2010 Iron Dog triumph was no fluke, Polaris riders Tyler Huntington and Chris Olds battled their way through severe weather and extremely tight competition to repeat as champions in the race that bills itself as the longest, toughest snowmobile race on the planet.

As the duo crossed the finish line in downtown Fairbanks a few minutes shy of 6 p.m. Saturday night, the win was as much about beating the trail conditions as it was besting the other competitors. The fact that the finish came in the evening bore testament to the slow and treacherous going over much of the course—the racers are normally held at bay in Tanana to allow for a mid-day finish on Saturday.

The race that runs from Big Lake to Nome before taking a U-turn and then continuing on to Fairbanks normally takes seven days—that includes a long layover in Nome. Despite heavy snow slowing teams down in the first half of the race, it appeared that the 2011 Iron Dog would proceed near its normal pace as racers started roaring into Nome Feb. 28.

Mother Nature, however, had other plans as she unleashed her full fury in the form of a storm that blew in Wednesday and only gathered steam as time went by. By Thursday, the driving winds and snow had altered the landscape and made for nearly impossible if not deadly riding conditions at times. Wind-driven waters on the Bering Sea pushed massive chunks of sea ice onto the Norton Sound coast and created open leads of water and overflow.

As the storm raged on Thursday morning, race directors abandoned the planned 8 a.m. start. After a midday meeting it was decided that racers would travel in groups under a "yellow caution flag" to Unalakleet

Governor asks legislature to fund three-year arctic ports study

Council proposes Wednesday evening meetings

By Laurie McNicholas

City Manager Josie Bahnke said Nome will be able to develop a port master plan if the Alaska Legislature approves Gov. Sean Parnell's amended FY 2012 capital budget, which includes an appropriation of $972,000 from the general fund to the Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities for an arctic ports study. Bahnke told the Nome Common Council at a meeting on Monday that the governor submitted the amended budget to the legislature on Feb. 16.

The appropriation would fund the study and mapping of potential arctic deepwater port sites in conjunction with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, according to a statement of need accompanying the funding request. A deepwater arctic port would provide a new, northernmost port for the U.S. Coast Guard to protect and patrol the state's arctic waters. USCG icebreakers and other vessels require a minimum of -35 feet. Additional funding of $1 million in each of the years FY 2013 and FY 2014 will be required to complete the study. Half the funding for FY 2013 and FY 2014 would come from federal receipts and half from the state general fund.

The council heard second reading of an ordinance authorizing disposal of municipal property by use permit to the Nome Rotary Club for the East End Park and held a public hearing. Adam Lust asked the council to support the land use agreement between the city and the Rotary Club for maintenance and enhancement of the park.

Kirsten Bey of the Nome Kennel Club also voiced support for the Rotary Club's plans to develop the park for local recreational uses. She said the Kennel Club has had no good spot to start dog team races for the past couple of years due to widening Sitnasuak proposes to construct a justice center for the court system, district attorney, public defender, state troopers and Division of Motor Vehicles, Adult Probation Office and Office of Children's' Services on an empty lot Sitnasuak owns next to the Bering Straits Native Corp. building on Front Street. Booth said the corporation would then backfill its existing office building on Front Street with offices of the Division of Elections, Legislative Affairs Agency, Dept. of Fish and Game, Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development, Dept. of Labor and Division of Public Assistance.

Booth said the proposal "leaves DOT where they want to be, leasing from the school." Offices of the Dept. of Transportation and Public Facilities are located on the Nome-Beltz High School campus.

Booth provided printouts of a PowerPoint presentation that calls for a 20-year, government-to-government lease for the proposed justice center and the existing Sitnasuak Building. The document says the

By Sen. Donald Olson District T Alaska State Legislature Alaska Coastal Management Program

The Alaska Coastal Management Program, commonly referred to as the ACMP, was first established in 1979. In the past, the program allowed coastal districts to create district management plans, which guided regional development. The plans were to be consistent with state and federal law. Once a plan was approved, all development projects within the district must comply with the plan. The State of Alaska received $2.6 million in federal funding annually for administration of the ACMP. Some of these funds went to local districts for work on coastal management in their area.

In 2003, Governor Frank Murkowski limited the role of local communities and their meaningful participation in the program. He eliminated the Coastal Policy Board, which included members from communities across the state. This board had oversight of the Department of Natural Resources' management of the program and final approval of each district's plan. Governor Murkowski also significantly limited what could be included in the plans. The net effect of these changes removed a legitimate voice for local communities in development deci-

Currently, the legislature is again reviewing the program for several reasons. It will sunset in July of this year if no action is taken and the program will terminate. Recent reports submitted by the legislative audit division suggest a number of needed improvements. As your senator, along with other bush legislators, Î am seeking more local control. Some possible amendments we would like to see in the ACMP revert back to prior 2003 modifications. I support the need for an expanded range in enforceable policies in district management plans that guide development. For instance, the Department of Environmental Conservation Carve-out prohibits local districts from enforcing any policies on air and water pollution. Understanding the cultural values and lifestyles of my constituents and our dependence on our subsistence and responsible stewardship of our local resources, it seems only sensible to offer local policy enforcement. I also like the idea of reinstating the Coastal Policy Council with memberships from different regions of the state. The diversity of this council would allow impartial authority overseeing statewide policies.

Hopefully, these amendments will be enacted by the legislature and approved by the governor. If successful, the changes will allow local community members, those who live within close proximity to our Alaskan coastlines, to have a strong voice in management decisions that affect their area.

Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Association

I attempted to fly to Mountain Village for the annual Yukon River Drainage Fisheries Association in mid-February but the unpredictable Alaskan weather prevented me from making it to the meeting. Fortunately, a staffer of mine who is from Mountain Village, Loren Peterson, was able to get there early enough and attended the meetings throughout the convention.

The issue of bycatch continues to be a huge concern and from my understanding, an Incentive Plan Agreement has been implemented to reduce the cap on bycatch fishing in the Bering Sea to 60,000 Chinook salmon. This now applies to all pollock fisheries in the Bering Sea, not only covering a certain block just above the Aleutian Chain, which was the case in the past. This change should allow for further escapement of the Chinook salmon to return to their spawning grounds along the Yukon

Secrets?

It's so important for governments to maintain transparency and an open public process. (Just ask Hosni and Momar). As citizens we must constantly keep nipping at the heels of our elected officials to keep politics open and honest. If we get complaisant, the officials in power will move away from the light and hide in the shadows of executive sessions. Good government operates in the light.

It's interesting how we can sit here in western Alaska and watch as world events unfold in Egypt, Tunisia, Libya and other nations that have thrown off years of corruption and oppression as they strive for a taste of democracy. We take what we have for granted and just get lazy about keeping tabs on the behind the scenes maneuvering and goings-on in local government. We have to keep a close eye on our public officials. Our Common Council wants to move its meeting night from Monday to Wednesday with a 5 p.m. start time. It would be nine days from meeting time until the newspaper could report on the meeting. Currently the Monday night meeting allows for Wednesday evening newspaper report on City Council issues. A move to Wednesday would make it difficult for folks who attend Nome Volunteer Fire Department and Nome Volunteer Ambulance Service meetings. Several local churches also hold Wednesday evening services. Furthermore, an ordinance could pass its first reading, second reading and final passage before the public could get a grasp of the situation. That would not be open government.

Let's hope Nome Common Council thinks their proposal through and keeps their meetings on Monday. It's OK if they meet at 5:30 p.m. instead of 7:30 p.m. Let's hope our politicians do their best to serve the public instead of acting for their own convenience. Nomeites, keep up the pressure. Attend public meetings, keep a close watch on the public process. Let's encourage our city fathers and mothers to demand transparency and openness in government. —N.L.M.—

A Look at the Past

F.H. Nowell photo and comments courtesy of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum OUT FOR A SUNDAY DRIVE —Capt. Ejnar Mikkelsen (left) and Adams leaving Nome January 19, 1905 for the Outside. Ejnar Mikkelsen was a Danish Polar Explorer who is credited with early travels on the east coast of Greenland. He lived for a short time in Nome; however, long enough to share his adventures with the students of the Nome Public School. Note the schoolhouse in the background. Google Ejnar Mikkelsen Nome for a fascinating account of his outrageous Arctic travels. Born in Denmark in 1880, he lived to be 91 years old!

Circumpolar Inuit sign declaration on responsible resource development

Native leaders from Greenland, Alaska, Russia and Canada tackled the issue of resource development in last week's two-day Inuit Circumpolar Council summit in Ottawa and came out with a declaration that aims to guide mining and offshore oil drilling in the Arctic. The council's chairman Aqqaluk Lynge said that Inuit peoples want a seat at the table when it comes to setting the ground rules for resource development in the Arctic. The "Circumpolar Inuit Declaration on Responsible Resource Development Principles" outlines demands that include that Inuit are the primary beneficiaries of resource development and that developers respect the UN Declaration on the Rights of Indigenous Peoples and Inuit legal rights. Also, the declaration calls for balancing the risks and benefits of development and ensuring development is sustainable and demands that environmental and social impacts from resource development are being properly assessed.

Bills moving through Juneau

The Alaska Senate unanimously voted to pass a bill to provide state funding for free and reduced-price meals in Alaska schools.

Hardly a controversial bill, it had eight co-sponsors and crossed partisan lines. The bill will provide school districts with 35 cents for each free or reduced-price breakfast served and 15 cents per lunch. The money would allow schools to increase the number of kids in their programs and improve the nutritional quality of the meals they

Alaska is only one of twelve states that do not supplement federal funding for school meals. The bill now goes to the House of Representatives for consideration. In the House, a bill passed that would honor the burial wishes of members of the armed forces by allowing them to designate which of their family members would act as next of kin in the event of their death. Alaska currently does not allow service members to choose which family members will handle their remains. The bill already passed the Senate and is on its way to the Governor's office for his signature.

The Senate started an audit of department heads to find ways for more efficient and less expensive state government. It's called the $ave Alaska Project and began with the State Affairs Committee holding hearings with the commissioners of the departments of Administration, Public Safety and Corrections. The committee wants to hold public hearings to collect ideas from the public about ways Alaska's state government can become leaner, smarter and more focused. A recent report by the University of Alaska's Institute of Social and Economic Research warns that the state is living beyond its means and needs to save more for the future.

In that vein, a Senate bill introduced by North Pole Senator John Coghill may be hard to reconcile with fiscal conservatives. The ethics bill SB 89 would allow, among other things, legislators and legislative employees to participate in partisan political activities while traveling on the state's dime. It also would allow the use of the legislative mailing list for campaign and non-legislative purposes. This bill has not moved out of State Affairs committee yet.

Also controversial is the Alaska performance scholarship bill that aims to award college or vocational school scholarships to high performing students. Governor Sean Parnell introduced the bill. Senator Albert Kookesh challenges the bill as written, saying that that classes required to qualify for the scholarship are not available at many of the rural schools around Alaska. Kookesh said he fully supports raising Alaska's education standards and would like to see a funded scholarship program that gives all Alaskans an opportunity to attend college or vocational school, but he cannot support Senate Bill 43 because it excludes many Alaskan students. In a letter to the finance committee Kookesh said that the bill would create an elitist scholarship that would only take care of the top percentage of high performing students.

House urges Feds to open ANWR

The Alaska State House of Representatives passed a resolution urging the Congress to open the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to responsible oil exploration and development. House Special Committee on Energy Co-Chair Lance Pruitt (R-Anchorage) sponsored the resolution to echo legislative action to "enthusiastically support the opening of ANWR.

Governor pushes mining for Rare Earth Elements in Alaska

Governor Sean Parnell wants to fund a three-year project to identify Alaska's rare earth element deposits and proposed to President Barack Obama to partner with Alaska to get those REEs out of the ground. This project will include conducting geologic fieldwork and developing Alaska specific REE mineral-deposit models. In a letter, Parnell urged President Obama to consider directing the U.S. Geological Survey to conduct a similar inventory and geological fieldwork project on federal lands in Alaska.

The governor also urged better coordination in the federal permitting process, saying that the federal mining permitting system ranks as the least efficient in 25 mining countries. Parnell also proposed to the President to work with Congress to amend existing federal statutes to give the U.S. Department of Energy the authority to hand out loan guarantees, grants, and tax credits for companies mining and processing REEs.

Fire destroys home on Dexter Pass Road

By Nancy McGuire

Paul Thompson escaped his burning home with his life last Wednesday evening, Feb. 23. Thompson lived in a two-story yellow house just outside the city limits on the Dexter Pass Road.

Thompson was upstairs cooking his supper when the electrical power went out at 8:53 p.m. and didn't come back on until 10:11 p.m.

A short time after the power came back on, Thompson looked downstairs and saw a lot of smoke and flames coming from around his Toyo stove oil heater. He noticed later that the fire seemed to be between the walls on the backside of the sheet rock.

Thompson says he ran out of the house without his cell phone so couldn't call for help. He had to run about 1/4 mile to his nearest neighbor, Ramon Gandia's home to call for help. Thompson says he tried to re-enter his burning house to find his dog, but the pup was hiding and likely died in the fire. Thompson suffered minor smoke inhalation, but otherwise was not injured.

Thompson says his house is totally ruined, "It's flat. God bless the fire department for trying."

Fire Chief Matt Johnson says NVFD was called out at 11 p.m. and 26 firefighters and 4-6 ambulance personnel responded. "When we arrived on the scene the house was fully involved. It had probably been burning for about 15 minutes before we were called. We tried to protect what we could. There was a green building (Thompson's old house) nearby."

The Dexter Pass Road had been plowed earlier that day, but the access drive between the house and the road was chest deep in snow. The NVFD firefighters have their resources and were able to secure the use of three front-end loaders from the City of Nome, Tummet Construction, and the State of Alaska to clear the path

There were high winds and limited water but, Johnson says," We were fortunate that the wind was from the south and it wasn't too cold."

Johnson stresses that the main thing to do in a fire is to get out, and Thompson did the right thing— he got out.

The NVFD stayed on the scene till 1:15 a.m.

Storm locks down Nome

By Nancy McGuire

Frozen locks, ice encased trucks, no mail, no planes, no school and closed offices put Nomeites to the challenge.

The last jet out of Nome left Tuesday evening and the roar of the mighty engines did not return to the runways till Friday morning. Wes Adkins of the US Weather

Wes Adkins of the US Weather Service in Nome explains that a good-sized low pressure system stalled out over Chukotka, Anadyr and the Chukchi Sea, while a strong high pressure system sat and gathered strength over the Alaskan interior. This combination fueled a major winter storm catching Nome in the middle with near record breaking southerly winds and precipitation. It brought coastal flooding and a phenomenon called an ice shove.

Adkins reminds us that ice usually protects our coastline from winter flooding. However, the very strong winds that averaged about 34 mph with gusts of 53 mph pushed water under the shorefast ice and lifted and pushed it. The result was an 8-12 ft. high ribbon of ice extending all the way down Nome's East Beach and in other areas of the coastline. Adkins speculates this ice shove will be around for a while and may make our Polar Bear Swim next June a unique challenge.

Areas around the river mouths usually have weaker ice and these places had breaks where the water was gurgling up to the surface.

Communities north of Nome had problems with coastal flooding. Deering had its runway flooded, Kotzebue had coastal flood warnings and water on their Front Street.

The average winds of 34 mph with gusts of 53 mph made Thursday March 24 the seventh windiest day in the last 10 years. The windiest was back on March 8, 2009 with 37 mph average winds. (The Weather Service in Nome only started keeping wind speeds 10 years ago.) Nomeites listened to the winds howl and pound their homes from the south. Doors hammered, windows rattled, the power went out, and was restored. School was cancelled on Thursday, city offices were closed, businesses closed so employees could go home early. There was no mail delivered to Nome, there was no air cargo, and passenger service was halted for the duration of the storm. It was a challenge to cross the street. The only thing that moved on Thursday was the Iron Dog Race. The snowmachiners left Nome motivated by money, not common sense, and may have regretted that decision.

The Tuesday storm actually was preceded on the weekend of the 19-20th by a storm that dropped 11 inches of snow on Nome. Conditions quickly changed and temperatures went from a -16°F on the 19th all the way up to a balmy 20°F on the 20th. Tuesday and Wednesday had temperatures above freezing and rain mixed with snow thrown at us with force.

Friday afternoon finally saw the backside of the storm kick out at us with high winds, snow blown off the hills, whiteout and ground blizzards. Relief and calm came on Saturday.

During these adverse conditions the State of Alaska and City of Nome kept the roads open. Nome Joint Utilities kept the power flowing, the Nome Volunteer Fire Department fought a house fire (See story above) and the Volunteer Ambulance Service and Nome Police responded to emergency calls.

• State office building

City of Nome would lease the buildings from SNC and then lease them to the State of Alaska. The arrangement apparently would enable the City of Nome to sign a sole-source, non-competitive contract allowing Sitnasuak to construct and manage the proposed justice center.

"We [the City of Nome] are only involved in the justice center, not the existing Sitnasuak Building," stated Councilman Jerald Brown. "Right," replied Booth.

Booth said Bill Humphries, Sitnasuak's chief operating officer was en route to Juneau to discuss Sitnasuak's proposal with several commissioners of state departments that have agencies in Nome at a meeting on Feb. 25. The PowerPoint presentation includes the square footage each agency requires for office space. She said if the state buys into Sitnasuak's basic concept for a justice center, the SNC board of directors will be asked if they want to do a feasibility study for the project.

Booth said Sitnasuak has been asked to submit a detailed plan for the project to the Alaska Legislature by the end of the current session, so Humprhies will ask the commissioners to indicate whether the state concurs with the company's concept within seven working days. Brown said legislative approval is required for a state lease in excess of five years.

City Manager Josie Bahnke said as part of an agreement with Sitnasuak, the city would set a property rate of 10 mills per year for 20 years for the proposed justice center. She estimated the center would cost about $17 million to construct, and said the 10 mill rate would yield about $170,000 per year in property taxes.

Councilman Stan Andersen asked whether the state will own the proposed justice center at the end of the 20-year lease. Booth said the state would rather not own the building and prefers a negotiated lease option. Sitnasuak may need to buy private property located between the existing Sitnasuak Building and the proposed justice center to accommodate potential state requirements for parking space, she added.

of the Nome Bypass Road and increasing traffic as the new hospital is constructed.

Bey said she is not sure East End Park is a good starting point for dog races because the land in the area is swampy, but she said she is discussing the possibility and other potential winter activities at the site with Rotary Club members.

Councilman Stan Andersen noted that the permit can be cancelled with 30 days notice, the club can't assign it to anyone else, and discrimination is prohibited in the conduct of permitted activities at the park. The term of the permit is for 10 years with an option for renewal. The council unanimously approved the ordinance.

The council also unanimously approved an ordinance to amend the order of business for regular meetings of the council—Section 2.15.070(a)(4)(B) in the Nome Code of Ordinances—to add an "Approval of agenda" to each meeting agenda; reword the agenda item, "Citizen's grievances and requests" to read "Citizen's comments"; and provide two opportunities for citizen's comments instead of one.

The council heard first reading of an ordinance amending Section 2.15.070(a)(1)(A) of the Nome Code of Ordinances to change the regular city council meetings from 7:30 p.m. on the second and fourth Mondays of the month to 5:30 p.m. on the second and fourth Wednesdays of the month. The council passed the ordinance to second reading at the next regular meeting by a 4-1 vote, with Councilwoman Mary Knodel voting no.

Councilman Jim West Jr. was absent from the meeting.

The council adopted a resolution authorizing the city to issue a permit to Melvin L. Terry, dba Nome AK Gold Concentrates, LLC to operate a placer mine within the Moonlight Wells protection area in the 2011 mining season.

The resolution says Acting City Engineer Bristol Environment & Engineering Services has reviewed the application, conducted four site inspections (in 2007, 2008, 2009 and 2010) and prepared a 2007 Moonlight Wells Permit based upon best management practices. Andersen noted that conditions of the permit say it is effective only when the city engineer has issued a written notice to proceed, so the engineer will inspect the site after it is free of snow.

State office building

Project scaled down

Booth said the proposed justice center is about half the size of the three-story state office building project on Sitnasuak's Front Street lot in the initial proposal for a governmentto-government lease put together by SNC and the City of Nome. The city sent the initial proposal in a letter to the governor's office last summer in response to a request from the Dept. of Administration for letters of interest in providing office space for Nome offices of state agencies, according to an article by Sandra Medearis in the July 22, 2010 edition of The Nome Nugget (pp.1, 6).

"...The request came after Front Street business owners protested state Department of Transportation and Public Facilities plans to build the $40 million, 60,000-square-foot building at the north end of Steadman Street on land purchased from Alaska Gold Co.," Madearis wrote. She reported the plan would require Sitnasuak to buy land for parking space from two private landowners, Mark Sackett and Jim West Jr., who is a member of the Nome Common Council.

"The City, in secret meetings with Sitnasuak and landowners, has developed three options, one of which would require vacating Lanes Way and selling it to Sitnasuak," Medearis continued. "The five-page proposal comprises a two-page letter and three design drawings involving public funds, the discussion of which was not available to the public. Open meeting laws are predicated on allowing the public to witness debate and follow the thinking of their representatives while they arrive at decisions involving expenditures of the public money and resources, i.e., sale of a public street. Stapled to the proposal is a letter of support from Nome Chamber of Commerce and letters from Sackett and West vowing to negotiate sale of their land in good faith."

Lobbying efforts needed

Knitting the bones of the embryonic justice center concept to gain legislative approval for the proposed government-to-government agreement is likely to require additional time and effort from City and Sitnasuak officials. Mayor Denise Michels noted that the revitalization of Front Street is in the City's comprehensive plan. She reminded the council that the federal government plans to issue a request for proposals in May or June to sell the federal building on Front Street that houses the court system and post office.

The court is now driving this," she said. "We are looking to state agencies to do this. For a true government to government relationship, we must be joined at the hip.

Michels said she, Utility Manager John Handeland, Bahnke and Sitnasuak officials have spent a lot of time on the proposed state office building project. She said she was asked to travel to Juneau but did not have the council's authorization to do so. Additional expenses potentially will be required, and teleconferencing will be used as much as possible, she added.

Ivanoff voices opposition

Nikolai Ivanoff, the only member of the public present at the work session except for the Nugget reporter, said if the justice center is built, state offices will be in four or five locations in Nome. Booth said state offices will be in four places, adding that DOTPF has a facilities maintenance shop in addition to its offices. Michels mentioned that the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development currently rents office space in the Bering Straits Native Corp. building.

Ivanoff said it would be better for taxpayers and visiting villagers if the state offices were all under one roof. Why not Steadman?" he asked.

Michels said that site has already been discussed.

"I know, but you do not listen," Ivanoff said. He insisted it would be much more cost-efficient to build one building on a site that would accommodate expansion rather than at a downtown location.

In March 2010 the Nome Common Council approved a resolution endorsing the Steadman Street site and agreeing to vacate a portion of the Sixth Avenue right of way. The action drew protests from downtown property owners and the Nome Chamber of Commerce. During public comments at a council meeting on April 12, speakers said they do not want state offices to leave Front Street, so the council approved a new resolution welcoming the building but asking the state to consider other sites or combinations on or near Front Street.

a motion by Councilman Jerald Brown suggesting that the city consider buying non-placer mining and non-gravel properties that Alaska Gold Co. is offering for sale.

Utility manager report

Utility Manager John Handeland thanked staff for keeping things going during the strangest weather conditions in the Nome area that he can recall. He said recent high winds and low temperatures caused icing conditions. There were no downed lines, but one came undone and caused a small fire at the top of a pole that the crew handled in short order, he added

Handeland said the north feeder was the source of a recent hour-long power outage at Icy View and Nome-Beltz High School. When construction of the hospital is completed, lines will be segregated and things should go better, he added. Handeland said a water leak on N Street has been traced to the main pipe and repaired.

City manager report

Bahnke said recent severe weather caused the failure of the remaining 25 poles and netting on the south and east corners at the landfill. She is working with the city attorney to request that Bristol Environment & Engineering provide design and construction services for replacement of the poles on the litter fence at no cost to the city, as the firm has agreed to do for the replacement of 13 other poles at the site.

Bahnke thanked city road crews for a great job clearing snow after recent storms. Brown, Councilwoman Josie Stiles and Mayor Denise Michels also praised the crews for timely and efficient snow removal. Stiles thanked staff for the use of the Public Works garage last week dur-

Upcoming events

The Nome Planning Commission will meet at 6 p.m. on March 8 to discuss abatement of derelict buildings and junked vehicles.

The city received an invitation to sponsor the 2011 Spirit of Youth Awards Dinner March 19 at the Marriott Hotel in Anchorage. Sam Schmidt of Nome is among 22 teenagers from across Alaska selected for an award. Schmidt won recognition in the category of service to young children for volunteering as a teacher's aide at Nome Public Schools for the past four years. "His first-hand experience with roadblocks to his own education help him empathize and challenge students with similar struggles,' reads the NPS award nomination.

Sponsorship levels are $5,000 for an awards dinner sponsor, $750 for a table sponsor and $500 for a youth table sponsor. A table for 10 is provided at each award level. The Spirit of Youth is dedicated to creating, promoting and recognizing youth involvement in communities across Alaska, according to the organization's website.

Nome nose count to come this month

By Sandra L. Medearis

The 2010 Census says that Alaska has 710,231 residents, an increase of 13.3 percent over the 2000 count.

It would appear that Alaska would continue to have only one representative in the U.S. House of Representatives. The 435 representatives are apportioned at 710,767 persons per representative. Again, Alaska's 2010 number is 710,231, qualifying the state for one representative.

How many of those people live in Nome or on the Seward Peninsula has not been released. The U.S. Census Bureau has released local figures for almost half the 50 states, The remainder, Alaska included, will come by the end of the month.

We do know that Alaska has kept up with the western region of the Lower 48 that shows an increase in population of 13.8 percent. Alaska was among the states showing an increase of 5 to 15 percent. Nevada had the greatest increase in population of over 35 percent.

Census Director Robert Graves announced in December that the nanose count numbered 308,745,538 on April 1, 2010, an increase of 9.7 percent over 2000. Other parts of the country had smaller increases than the West: Midwest, 3.9 percent; Northeast, 3.2 percent; South, 14.3 percent. It remains to be seen which way the center of population has moved, but perhaps westward.

Center of population? Each decade, after it tabulates the decennial census, the Census Bureau calculates the center of population. The center is determined as the place where an imaginary, flat, weightless and rigid map of the United States would balance perfectly if all residents were of identical weight. In 2000, the population center was Edgar, Mo.

In April, the Bureau will announce population and housing unit counts for the United States, regions, divisions, and American Indian, Alaska Native, and Native Hawaiian areas.

Board tackles budgets and breakfast while search continues for new superintendent

Ry Lori Head

With a winter storm brewing outside, all was calm in the library of the Elementary School as the Nome Board of Education met in a work session and punched through an ambitious agenda.

Superintendent Search Process

As of February 18, there are ten applicants for the position. The potentials possess varying degrees of experience and currently reside in Texas, Ohio, Michigan, Oregon, Montana or Alaska. The only obvious common denominators are that they are male and desire to be Nome's next Superintendent. The School Board will meet with Joseph Reeves, AASB's Associate Executive Director, on March 10 to, "select finalists, and develop interview questions and protocols," according to Board President Gloria Karmun. Interviews with final candidates will take place in Nome on March 22-24. Stimulus Fund Update

Superintendent Jon Wehde reported that, "there is only one strand remaining that is unencumbered" of $17,000 and he is proposing that it be earmarked for an oven priced at $7,000 and the remainder spent on Social Studies curriculum materials. The money must be spent by September 1, 2012.

Strategic Plan

The Board received a 31-page Public Comment Draft Edition of Nome Public School's Strategic Plan and Wehde suggested they "open the floor on Goal One which is Student Learning, surely the highest priority of the five goals. They're all important, but that's why Goal One is Student Learning." The five goals of the Strategic Plan Wehde referred to also include: (2) Stakeholder Satisfaction, (3) Workforce Development, (4) Support Systems and (5) Fiscal Effectiveness.

Board Member Barb Amarok began by saying that she was, "very impressed with all the efforts and with all the actual accomplishments of the teachers and the staff addressing the strategic plan."

Amarok then asked who was working on the Native Programs curriculum and materials webpage linked to NPS website objective. Jon Berkeley, Director of Federal Programs, Instruction and Accountability, answered, "It is very high on my priority list... My plan is to have Native Programs kind of modeled after Federal Programs that will include Migrant/Indian Ed, as well as, heritage type information."

Amarok's final comments regarded the objective of a district newsletter under the Goal Two — Public Information section. She stated, "I think that would be a great idea because we could have news from the High School, news from the Elementary School and then there's a section in there that says we're supposed to recognize community organizations that support the schools. We could include that. We could include everything...I know that would take work."

FY12 Proposed General Fund Budget DRAFT

Business manager Cathi Wotjanek emphasized three times that this budget is preliminary. She estimates a decrease in revenues for FY12 of $371,709 and an increase in expenses of roughly the same, $349,880

Decreases in revenue are due to an estimated drop in student count (ADM – Average Daily Membership) to 650, rather than this year's 657, less from the city in its required

4 mill contribution, and less from State retirement systems and Impact Aid. It does factor in an estimate of an additional $82,326 from the city that is not required and would be above-and-beyond last year's $791,674 contribution.

Increases in personnel expenses are due to the step increases for certificated and non-certificated salaries. Wojtanek plugged in last year's amount of $2,890,235 for personnel benefits with the understanding that when she has a better handle on future health insurance costs the amount will almost surely increase.

Wehde characterized the budget as a $725,000 shortfall, at this time, with key expenses of fuel and utilities still to be determined. He also explained that the school district is presently under budget for FY11, which may be a possible tool to consider while balancing the FY12 budget. Wehde noted the City is turning to their fund balance, as well as many school districts our size are considering the process of accessing their fund balance to balance their budgets. He said with the challenges facing the district it wouldn't be a year where he's arbitrarily targeting additional staff, nor would he say that there were imminent reductions in staff. Wehde concluded with, "There is much work that Jon, Cathi and I will do before the next report." Beltz Breakfast Concept

Wehde began this discussion by stating that there was no question about the value of a nutritional meal or snack for any of our students. However, he said there's no mechanical problem, it's all financial. "Our food service, per se, always, historically runs in the red." Last year he estimated a $140,000 loss. That loss includes the cost of the food and approximately five full-time employee's wages to cook and serve it in two buildings. To compound the cost, Wehde estimates that 67 percent of our students receive free lunches, which are subsidized, but the subsidy does not cover the complete cost.

According to Wehde, the board would be looking at about $1 per student for breakfast, even if there were parent volunteers or willing staff to help. There are grants such as the Fresh Fruit and Vegetable Grant for K-6, but comparative grants for a 7-12 or K-12 Breakfast Nutrition program have been elusive. And with budgets tight everywhere, Nome Eskimo is discussing whether they can "hold the boat" with regards to continued support of the Elementary breakfast program, according to Wehde.

Board Member Betsy Brennan commented that as much as she'd want a breakfast for all students, perhaps elementary students should be a priority, if that ever had to be determined, since younger children are not as able to get up on their own and make themselves something to eat in the morning. Barring any budget windfalls or donations for a breakfast program, Wehde said the Board may want to consider during the final budget moments reallocating funds to support even an energy bar or fruit for the Beltz students. He summed it up as, "Something is better than nothing.'

2011 School Library Community Outreach Award

Joy Hewitt, Nome Public School's District Librarian, was honored recently at an AASL (Alaska Association of School Librarians) meeting with the 2011 School Library Community Outreach Award. The plaque read, "Established in 2011 to give statewide recognition to school librarians for significant contributions and connections promoting literacy in and with the community." Brennan shared the news with the Board and Amarok commented, "Joy definitely deserves that."

The Nome Board of Education will meet next on March 8, at 5:30 p.m. in the Nome Elementary School

School Board approves first reading of Reading Initiative

By Lori Head

Are you smarter than a third grader? By end of school year 2014, the goal is that 90 percent of Nome Elementary School's third-graders will be reading at or above grade level.

This will be measured by the student attaining at least a 40 percentile score on the MAP Test. Based on analysis of the MAP scores, it is believed that a student scoring at the 40 percentile would be considered reading at grade level or proficient. Board Member Marie Tozier asked where we were at, right now, regarding this goal. Jon Berkeley, Director of Federal Programs, Instruction and Accountability, and author of The 90 percent Reading Initiative answered, "about 35 to 45 percent," of current third-graders are reading at or above grade level based on the MAP

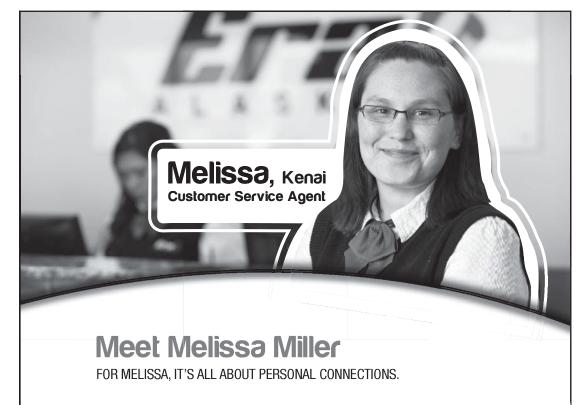

The test is administered three times a school year - once in the fall, winter and spring for grades 2 through 12. Berkeley touts the MAP as "quite the all-in-one" system. He explains that teachers have access to past MAP Assessments, "Whether you want to look at a group, whether you want to look at a particular group within your class or in a RIT score range. You can look at what skills each child would need to work on in order to start bridging those gaps." To further understand the power of RIT (Rasch Unit), a fourthgrader with a RIT score of 203 would be approximately in the 40 percentile reading range, a score of 206 for the same student would be approximately the 50 percentile reading range.

The school district has approximately six years of MAP scores, as well as DIBELS (Dynamic Indicators of Basic Early Literacy Skills) scores, to serve as a baseline and hopefully show the growth in reading proficiency as this new initiative is pursued. AYP (Adequate Yearly Progress) is based on the SBA (Standards Based Assessments), which is given to third-graders through tenthgraders, once a year, the first week in April, with results available around August of the same year. While the SBAs do offer meaningful data, the MAP scores provide a glimpse of progress, or lack thereof, three times a school year, allowing opportunities for earlier corrections or interventions.

A key component in the initiative is that of direct reading instruction time. Resolution 2011-1 commits to elementary students receiving at least 90 to 120 minutes of reading instruction each school day. Kindergarten through 12th-grade students requiring intervention will receive extra reading instruction. Berkeley says a regular six-hour school day is 360 minutes. Currently, he estimates that Nome Public School students are receiving an average of 90 minutes of direct instruction. What is direct instruction? Berkeley describes it as "eyeball to eyeball" instruction. According to Berkeley, to mandate 120 minutes of this type of instruction for every student per day, "You're basically going to take every single adult in the building and you're going to pair them with a group of students. You're just going to say, 'You're not a PE teacher, you're a reading teacher. You're not a librarian, you're a reading teacher." Therefore, the range of at least 90 to 120 minutes seemed a reasonable commitment for the school district.

The initiative passed a first reading unanimously with all board members present, except Barb Nickels who was excused. It will have a second and final reading at the next regular board meeting on March 8, 2011.

All That Is Good

Don't you hate being told what to do? It doesn't matter the age. A two-year-old doesn't want to stop playing. A 10-year-old doesn't want to clean up his room. A teenager doesn't want a curfew. An adult doesn't want restrictions on how much alcohol they can consume. And a husband often times doesn't want to listen to the loving advice of his wife. Doing what someone else tells us to do just goes against our grain. We ceratinly don't want anyone placing restrictions on us and telling us what we should or shouldn't do. Instead, we'd rather determine for ourselves what is best for us. There is a problem with his line of reasoning. It is the sin of pride.

False pride tells us freedom is doing whatever I feel like doing. False pride tells us, no limits, no restrictions, no commandments, no rules. False pride tells us, what's true for you may not be true for me. And of course the biggest lie is that our false pride tells us there is no such thing as sin. However, if we reflect carefully, we should see pain and suffering all around us caused by doing our own thing without regard for others.

We exercise true freedom in doing God's will. But how do we know what God's will is? It simply wouldn't make sense for God to hold us accountable to his will if we didn't have a sure way of knowing what it is. The Ten Commandments were not solely laws revealed to Moses at Sinai. God also writes the truth of the commandments in our hearts and minds. And just as Jesus gave us the Sermon on the Mount, the Holy Spirit passes wisdom on through churches and through cultures. History teaches us that churches and cultures are not perfect, but history also has a way of sifting the wheat from the chaff. No man is so free as he who is able to renounce his own will and follow the will of God.

While on a recent trip to Kotzebue, I was invited to participate in a workshop on Inupiaq language revitalization. I couldn't help but contrast the Beattitudes with the wisdom, the living history, that was shared throughout the week. There was an honest pride in all that is good in the culture.

Blessed are the ancestors who passed on a way of life from one generation to the next, for they have taught us who we are and how to live.

Blessed are the elders, for they are living libraries full of knowledge and wisdom,

Blessed are the young and pure of heart, for they are eager to learn. Blessed are the hunters and harvesters, for they make good use of the land they have inherited.

Blessed are the sewers and craftsmen, for inner peace comes from making something from scratch.

Blessed are they who forgive and seek unity, for they teach us to live in peace. Blessed are the singers and dancers, for they give glory to God by their art.

Blessed are you when you struggle to use your Native tongue for your fears and anxieties will subside as you grow in ability. Blessed are you when the language God has given you is shared with others, for you will teach a way of life that offers hope for the future. Rejoice and be glad, for your reward will be great in heaven."

Truth and beauty and wisdom are passed from one generation to the next when we set our false pride to the side and humbly listen to those who seek to guide us to what is enduring and eternal.

Subsistence advisory council opts for 30,000 chum bycatch limit in Bering Sea /Aleutian Islands pollock fisheries

By Laurie McNicholas

The Seward Peninsula Subsistence Advisory Council has recommended limiting chum salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea Aleutian Islandsd pollock fisheries to 30,000 fish a year, reported Tim Smith and Louis Greene, Jr. at the Bering Sea Issues Forum held Feb. 23 in Nome. Smith and Greene are members of the Seward Peninsula council, one of 10 regional advisory councils of the Federal Subsistence Board chaired by Tim Towarak, former president of Bering Straits Native Corp.

Sally Bibb, Community Development Quota Coordinator for the National Marine Fisheries Service, described a management plan the North Pacific Fishery Management Council is developing to reduce chum bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. She served as a forum panelist in place of NPFMS staff members who were unable to attend.

Salmon are a prohibited species in the pollock fishery. Bibb said most of the salmon taken as incidental catches in the fishery are dead when they are brought on board and are then returned to the sea. Chum salmon bycatch in the fishery reached extremely high levels in the past decade, peaking at 700,000 fish in 2005. Bycatch numbers have declined in recent years, dropping to 13,000 chum salmon in 2010.

Bibb said the NPFMC is considering two chum bycatch management alternatives—either a hard cap limiting bycatch to 50,000 to 353,000 fish per year or triggered closures of fishing areas where the worst chum bycatch occurs. The council will select a preferred preliminary alternative for a chum salmon bycatch management plan at a meeting in Nome to begin on June 6.

Bibb said chum salmon taken as bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery are primarily of Asian origin. The proportion of chum bycatch of Alaskan origin ranges from 28 percent in June and July to 13 percent in August to October, she added.

Residents of communities throughout the Bering Strait region attended the Bering Sea Issues Forum during the Kawerak regional conference. Smith urged them to ask their communities and tribes to advocate for a 30,000 fish annual limit on chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. The Nome area has not had a commercial chum fishery since 1989 and has experienced the only tier two (extremely limited) chum salmon subsistence fishery in the state, he added.

Robert Keith of Elim said pollock fishers who are vigilant in avoiding salmon bycatch should be rewarded and those who are callous should be eliminated from the fishery. Bibb said the NPFMC requires publication of bycatch on a vessel by vessel basis. She said the council's management plan for Chinook (king) salmon bycatch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery that took effect this year includes bycatch limits that encourage salmon avoidance.

Richard D. Outwater

Richard D. Outwater, 61, died Feb. 7 at his home in Anchorage after an extended illness. Although Richard lived in Anchorage, he called the whole Seward Peninsula his home.

Richard was born July 27, 1949, in Deering to the late Walter E. and Ruth K. Outwater.

He attended Covenant High School, where he was active in sports and student council. Upon receiving his diploma from Nome High School, Richard served in the U.S. Navy aboard the U.S.S. Bennington during the Vietnam War. He was a Vietnam War Veteran.

Richard was trained extensively as a firefighter for the Anchorage Fire Department and The U.S. Navy. He also completed training in the building and construction fields. His last construction job was the building of the Alaska Native Medical Center.

He enjoyed fishing, snagging, and more fishing. While living in Anchorage, he found hunting grounds in many inconspicuous areas, like behind Wal-Mart with a slingshot. He was an urban hunter. Needless to say he shared his catch with many friends and family. Each day he enjoyed long walks, cooking and crossword puzzles. His family said: "Although he was not a bragger, he held his head very high. If you were his friend, you were his friend for life."

The Lord chose to end his suffering and now he is reunited with his loved ones in heaven, whom he missed dearly.

He is survived by his wife, Sandra Outwater; siblings, Theresa Pierce, Loretta and Skip Cox, Clara and Tom Varieur, Peggy and Tim Turner, Martha and Rahn Parker; and many nieces, nephews, and their families. In addition to his parents, Richard was preceded in death by Evelyn McNeven, Walter Outwater, Jr., first Walter Outwater, Jr., and Mammie Savok.

Richard was buried at the Fort Richardson National Cemetery.

River and tributaries. The North Pacific Fishery Management Council is currently working to reduce bycatch of chum and provide for further escapement.

Another issue, which was discussed at the meeting, was the customary trade policy. This regulates subsistence fish that can be sold for profit by Alaska Natives. This issue continues to be controversial considering it provides for fish and some income for our families, yet some feel that it continues to be abused by others. I hope the YRDFA and other fisheries organizations can work together to seek a resolution to this debatable issue.

I understand and share the concern of the fishermen of the Yukon River. Whether it is subsistence or commercial fishing, this resource is vital to our Native cultures. The salmon are a major component of all rural lifestyles. I'm glad to hear that the several communities that depend on fishing understand that they share the Yukon River and are willing to cooperate to sustain this valuable resource. I commend them on developing a conservation plan in hopes to allow repopulation of the Chinook salmon along the river.

I was pleased to hear that YRDFA will be creating new ways to have elders and youth participate in their organization. An Elders Council will be created to aid in providing direction in management of salmon fisheries during times of low returns and conservation needs. Also allowing youth involvement will give more opportunities to empower our youth in assisting our communities' goals towards responsible stewardship of our natural

I'd also like to mention that I have requested and have been approved to chair the Fish & Game Subcommittee and will be overseeing the F&G budget. Considering that the YRDFA organization has relied on federal earmarks in the past to maintain their organization and the earmark ban will negatively impact their influence, I am definitely considering the importance and prolongation of the association through some state

The University of Alaska currently leases a four-bedroom, two-bathroom, residence with a washer/dryer and garage for housing space in Nome, Alaska. This lease is due to expire on Nome, Alaska. Inis lease is due to expire on June 30, 2011. The Lessor has expressed a will-ingness to renegotiate a lease extension for a one (1) year period with one (1) additional one-year re-newal option. The University feels that the facility offers unique advantages for the operation of its research programs, thus best meeting the needs of the Nome community. Owners of other facili-ties, or interested parties, who have space of a comparable size and quality that they are willing to provide to the University under the same terms and conditions, including an occupancy date of July 1, 2011, please submit a written offer to: University of Alaska Fairbanks, Facilities Services, Atversity of Alaska Fairdanks, Facilities Services, Artention: Real Estate Management, PO Box 757380, Fairbanks, Alaska 99775-7380 or via facsimile to 907-474-2661 by the close of business on March 22, 2011. Such offers, if deemed suitable, may be considered for acceptance by the University, or it may be determined that a competitive process is necessary, in which case all interested parties may be given the opportunity to participate. If the University does not receive any such offers by the close of business on March 22, 2011, it will presume that no other comparable space is available and may enter in to direct ne-gotiations for space from the current Lessor. If you have any questions please contact Diana Martin at 907-474-6962 or dmartinp@alaska.edu.

described in 18 AAC 75.455(d) & (e), if the Department requests additional information from the applicant regarding this amendment application, the public comment deadline will be extended.

Oldest subarctic North American human remains found

A newly excavated archaeological site in Alaska contained the cremated remains of one of the earliest inhabitants of North America. University of Alaska Fairbanks archaeologist Ben Potter and four colleagues made the discovery of skeletal remains that appear to be of an approximately three-year-old child, found in an ancient fire pit within an equally ancient dwelling at the Upward Sun River site, near the Tanana River. Radiocarbon dating of wood at the site indicates the cremation took place roughly 11,500 years ago, when the Bering Land Bridge may still have connected Alaska and Asia. Initial observations of the teeth by UAF bio-archaeologist Joel Irish confirmed that the child is biologically affiliated with Native Americans and Northeast Asians. The apparent age of the remains from the site, researchers said, would certainly make them the oldest human remains found in northern North America as well as the secondyoungest Ice Age child on the continent.

Egil Ellis of Willow wins Fur Rondy sled dog race

Speed musher Egil Ellis of Willow notched his fifth victory of the Fur Rondy World Championship sled dog race, held last weekend in Anchorage. Arleigh Reynolds of Salcha came in second place, followed by Ken Chezik of Michigan. Nomeites Aaron Burmeister and Nils Hahn also participated in the speed race, held over three days and covering 25 miles of challenging urban trails.

Burmeister raced a dog team from the Canadian Streeper Kennel, finished in fifth place and received the rookie of the year award. Hahn finished in 17th place, racing dogs from his Arctic Sky Kennel. Absent from the finisher's circle was Blayne Streeper, who was poised to take his fifth victory in a row. Streeper was disqualified from the race after he showed unsportsmanlike conduct on the trail. While passing fellow competitor Luke Sampson of Kotzebue, Streeper shoved Sampson and yelled a profanity at him for allegedly not paying attention.

Janet Clarke, the race marshal, said that this kind of conduct is not acceptable and according to race rules bears the punishment of disqualification. Streeper issued a statement saying that he felt that the race marshal overreacted by disqualifying him, but he also apologized in the statement to race fans and Luke where the race would veer away from the sea ice and start again in earnest. Even that safety measure proved too risky for some as most teams still in the race holed up in villages along the way to await better conditions. Ultimately 14 of the 15 riders to leave Nome would race again for Fairbanks starting from Unalakleet on Friday afternoon.

While the weather eased up for the 644 miles between Unalakleet and Fairbanks, the trail conditions did not. The storm ran ahead of the racers leaving plenty of snow, drifts and overflow in its wake. But while the ride seemed especially tough this year, the trail itself always looms as one of the largest factors in the race, rewarding those who ride smart enough to keep their machines and bodies intact, but fast enough to stay ahead of other riders doing the same. For nearly all the 2011 race, it appeared a large number of riders were finding that perfect balance, as the difference between the top pack of racers was only minutes at nearly every turn in the course.

The race stayed tight right up to the very end. With only 100 miles to go in the race, Eric Quam and Todd Palin—an Iron Dog force to be reckoned with—held a 17-minute lead over Huntington and Olds. But the course can hold hazards for racers right up to the end, a reality borne out by the damaged ski on Palin's machine as he and Quam crossed the line almost 20 minutes after Huntington and Olds grabbed the title. The clock would only tick off another seven minutes before one of the winningest racers in Iron Dog history, Scott Davis, would cross the line with his son and teammate, Corey Davis.

Those few minutes separating the top teams cost a bit more than pride. For the win, Huntington and Olds nabbed $50,000 to split. The payout dropped to $35,000 for second place and $18,000 for third. The finish line prize money dried up after fifth place, which was worth $10,000. The sting of finishing just out of the money in Fairbanks for the sixthplace team of Marc McKenna and Dusty Van Meter was likely eased by the reward they had pocketed for being the first duo to arrive in Nome Feb. 22. A new halfway prize this year was worth $10,000 for the two.

While the finish in Fairbanks was tight, Van Meter and McKenna almost literally didn't have a minute to spare to take the halfway prize. Just four minutes after riding into the Gold Rush City, Palin and Quam roared off the sea ice to mark the first of their runner-up performances of the race. Huntington and Olds were only a minute behind Palin and Quam at that point.

A tough race for Nomeites

Near 6 p.m. Friday, a pullout near the newly formed ice wall that runs along the coast just east of Nome looked like a parking lot. The reason for the traffic soon became evident as a number of snowmachine headlights bobbed in the distance to the east. Cliff Johnson and Stacey Green were finally making it home.

The duo from Nome had to officially scratch in Koyuk as the storm moved in Wednesday afternoon. Two days later, even as the remaining pro class teams were starting to tear out of Unalakleet to start the race again to Fairbanks, Green and Johnson received a hero's welcome in Nome.

One more Nome racer remained on the trail Friday and Saturday even if no longer in the hunt. Nomeite James "Tres" West III and partner Andy George battled the course nearly to the finish before scratching in Manley approximately 200 miles from the finish. Of the 28 teams that started the race, only a dozen saw the finish line in Fairbanks.

Since the fall of 2010, however, one particular fish project has pulled the duo from the riverbank and immersed them in a sea of young schoolchildren. Asked by two Nome Elementary School teachers to lend a hand, Lean and Keith have provided assistance to a year-long project centered around raising Coho-also known as silversalmon in the classroom.

Over the years, a number of teachers in the Nome district have taken on the project to raise salmon using specially chilled fish tanks. This school year, second-grade teacher Matt Slingsby and first-grade teacher

Nikki Scherer are using one salmon tank and its aquatic inhabitants to teach everything from biology to language and cultural lessons. A second tank is being used by older students in the school's combined fifth- and sixth-grade classes under the direction of teacher Keith Conger.

The salmon in the classroom project is supported by the 4H Cooperative Extension Service and has received support from the Alaska Department of Fish and Game. The first- and second-grade classrooms have also received support from

Iditarod 39 on the trail to Nome

By Diana Haecker

The 2011 Iditarod Trail Sled Dog race is underway with 62 mushers and their dogs heading for Nome. The first days of the race saw sunny weather, not a cloud in the sky and fast trails leading into the Alaska Range. But it will take a crystal ball to predict how the rest of the race is going to shape up. Weather conditions, may they be "hot" or brutally cold, stormy or calm, are dictating trail conditions and that in turn influences a great deal how the dogs and their mushers are coping with whatever Mother Nature throws at

The ceremonial start in Anchorage took place on Saturday, March 5 with droves of people lining Fourth Avenue in downtown Anchorage. Dignitaries from both the mushing world and the realm of politics paid tribute to the 39th running of what is dubbed the Last Great Race. Seen at the Avenue to wish mushers good luck were Alaska senators Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich, Governor Sean Parnell, Lt. Governor Mead Treadwell and Anchorage Mayor Dan Sullivan. Also on hand to send off the teams was Nome Mayor Denise Michaels and Iditarod Trail Committee Director John Handeland.

Under blue skies, with helicopters buzzing aloft and thousands of fans lining the city streets and trails leading out to Campbell airstrip, the mushers were cheered by fans from near and far.

Florence Busch was wearing bib Number One as the honorary musher. In honor of her late husband Tom Busch, who unexpectedly died last November in Anchorage, Florence rode the first sled out of the

A Look at the Past

Editorial

Open the Windows

Open the windows and let in the light. Every part of government from the top of the tree all the way down to the grass roots benefits from fresh air and sunshine. We can use our own town as an example, but the problems extend past the horizon way beyond Front Street in Nome, Alaska. If we focus on Nome, we must encourage our elected officials to conduct the public's business in a manner that accommodates the people who elected them and their ability to be kept informed.

On the state level we have to deal with the hidden agendas of the billionaire corporations that want to stealth fleece our pockets and keep us in the dark. Is there a problem with the fox being in charge of the henhouse? How much tax- free oil, gas and minerals are we willing to give away? What do we do when these resources are gone? Does the American taxpayer feel good knowing they paid more federal tax than Exxon-Mobil? Does organized labor intend to sit still while the flying monkeys in governors' chairs try to break the backs of trade and professional unions? We have a Congress that acts like the bully on the beach who runs in and kicks over little kids' sand castles.

We have politicians who fire up a smoke screen by pushing the same tired knee-jerk issue buttons while behind the scenes they are destroying laws that protect the little guy and make it easier for the wealthy to pump up their bank accounts. Congress tries to put us on a guilt trip for wanting something from government. Yes, we want affordable health care. Yes, we want Social Security. Yes, we want reliable mail service. Yes, we want to drink clean water and breath clean air. Yes, we want financial security. If Congress wants to be serious about budget cuts they should stop throwing good money after bad and take a look at the elephants in the room. They are called Afghanistan and Iraq. —N.L.M.— ally wore on these two mushers!

This winter we have already on the ground a very large amount of snow, especially in February and the city of Nome Public Works Roads crew and DOT kept our streets and roads free from snow.

We have probably the best snow removing program in the state, because even in Anchorage after a snowstorm, the streets are full of snow and it is very hard to drive.

Both the City of Nome crew and DOT are doing a great job, and I think Nome citizens really appreci-

Of course all this could be different in a worse scenario, if city top officials/ leaders/city council did not pay attention and fund the snow removal program.

Health care reform law of the land – for now

The question whether the federal health care reform is constitutional or not is still not resolved. Florida federal court judge Roger Vinson, who ruled that the federal Health Care reform was unconstitutional, last week issued a 'stay' upon his ruling. This now means that Alaska Governor Sean Parnell, who said that the judge's ruling is the law of the land, is to comply with the health care reform law. Parnell said that his administration will treat the federal health care law as being in place. The stay will be lifted in seven days if the Obama administration doesn't file an appeal. Parnell said that he would prefer to use "state resources for state-based health care solutions to increase access and improve affordability, rather than become more entangled." Separately, Alaska Senator Hollis French had requested a legal analysis by the legislative legal division. Legislative counsel Dennis Bailey wrote in the Alaska legal division's analysis that "a decision of a federal district court judge is not binding precedent in [...] a different judicial district." Bailey concludes it is implausible that the decision of the federal court in Florida would have a [...] binding effect on the state when appellate review has not been exhausted." Five judges have weighed in on the Affordable Care Act. Other than the Florida judge, three have found the law constitutional, and one has ruled against the individual mandate alone. No Alaska court has taken up the question.

Begich introduces education

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich introduced education legislation aimed to promote science, technology, engineering and math. Begich said the so-called STEM Act is designed to prepare American students for a global economy by establishing competitive grants to help states develop comprehensive strategies. It would give funds to high-need students in high-need districts and emphasizes innovation and technology by enabling states and districts to apply "outside-the-box" thinking. The bill also supports professional development for STEM teachers. Begich introduced the bill in an effort to overhaul the federal No Child Left Behind Act, which he said is a disaster for Alaska. The Effective STEM Teaching and Learning Act is co-sponsored by Sen. Joe Lieberman of Connecticut and Sen. Tom Carper of Delaware.

Wanted: smart energy technology

A deadline to tap into a fund that aims to kickstart emerging energy technologies in Alaska is approaching. The so-called Emerging Energy Technology Fund, which is administered by the Alaska Energy Authority, gives out grants between $50,000 and $750,000 to Alaska businesses, electric utilities, post-secondary institutions, tribal or local governments and nonprofits to test an emerging energy technology in Alaska. Projects in partnership with the University of Alaska or another Alaska post-secondary institution are preferred and technologies will have to demonstrate that they could be commercially viable within five years.

The program, initially funded by the Denali Commission, supports projects like an innovative biogas digester in Cordova that brought cutting edge technology and research into local classrooms. The work the Cordova High School students did with project sponsors was built on research conducted by UAF scientists and can be applied in cold climates across the globe. Other grants included funding for more efficient wood pellet boilers, small-scale inriver hydrokinetic turbines and seawater heat pumps. Grant proposals must be submitted to the Alaska En

Alaska AG warns of money wiring scams

As part of the national consumer protection week, the Alaska Attorney General's Office warns Alaskans about the risks of wiring money. While money transfers through companies such as Moneygram and Western Union are convenient, there are known risks, they say. Scam reports from Alaskans include a scammer who hijacked a house listing, posted the house for rent and lured people into wiring money for rent and security deposits. Another person wired money for a bulldog puppy, which never was shipped to her. More information is available at www.ncpw.gov and www.law.alaska.gov/consumer.

Slashing Planned Parenthood funding not popular with voters

Under pressure to rein in the federal spending, the House of Representatives voted recently to slash the budget, and Planned Parenthood was one of the services seeing severe cuts. In Alaska, a poll conducted by Public Policy Polling shows opposition to bar Planned Parenthood from getting federal money. Planned Parenthood is a family planning service and also provides cancer screenings, breast exams, birth control, testing for HIV and testing and treatment for other sexually transmitted infections. The poll shows that senators supporting efforts to de-fund the organization would face political backlash. Other results show that 60 percent of Alaska voters disagree with cutting federal funding for cervical cancer screenings; 64 percent of Alaska voters disagree with cutting federal funding for breast cancer screenings provided at Planned Parenthood clinics every year; 64 percent of Alaska voters disagree with cutting federal funding for birth control, which Planned Parenthood provides to almost 2.5 million patients every year. Fifty percent of Alaska voters said they were less likely to vote for their Senator if he or she voted to bar Planned Parenthood from receiving federal funding for preventive care.

Lessons from a school of fish

gradually develop into juveniles over the course of the school year. Throughout the process, the classes learn about salmon lifecycles and what the fish need in terms of habitat and diet. But that's just skimming the surface of what the project can teach

Student scientists

On a recent morning, secondgrader Ada Lawrence carefully pushed the Styrofoam lid back on the salmon tank so she could fish the thermometer closer to the glass and record the water temperature. She confirmed a reading of 4°C, exactly what she expected it to be, and slid the cover back in place.

Lawrence was surrounded by four of her peers, each grasping a journal filled with observations and colorful renderings of the tank and its tiny, swimming occupants. With their inquisitive eyes and craning necks, the small crew possessed the air of a team of scientists-all that was missing were the white lab coats.

More than just looking like pintsized biologists, the students also talked the talk. Words like "alevin," "yolk sacs," and "substrate" rolled off the young tongues as if it were common second-grade parlance. The vocabulary has even stuck with the first-graders. "It seems like they're learning a lot and retaining a lot," Mrs. Scherer said. "They're pulling out vocabulary for first-graders that's pretty amazing, and they're using it. Most students have stopped using 'baby salmon' and are writing 'alevin." Chagrined at having firstand second-graders speaking over his comprehension level, this reporter had to look up "alevin" to find out that it refers to a young salmon that still has its yolk sac attached.

Mrs. Scherer said her students normally take time to study the tank once a week, looking for any developments the fish have undergone. Mr. Slingsby's second-graders also take observations, usually daily, recording the water temperature and noting in their science journals any changes they may see. "We take the water temperature, test the PH and water turbidity, and observe any deformities that might be present," Mr. Slingsby said. "We do this every morning, and it's a great activity to keep the kids involved with the proj-

The older students in Mr. Conger's class have even gone so far to take a mathematical look at how best to regulate the water temperature. "We did a big write-up in September to try and determine what the average daily temperature should be so that the salmon would hatch before Christmas break," he said. "They did an elaborate process.

The process worked, allowing the students to see the fruits of their labor before the two-week vacation. Mr. Conger said having the students leave for break with eggs in the tank only to return and find that they had missed their transformation into tiny fish would have been a letdown. "We had a week and maybe eight days to spare," he said.

Project gets its start from Snake River eggs

At the outset, teachers Mr. Slingsby and Mrs. Scherer approached Lean and NSEDC's Fisheries and Research Development Program for help in getting the salmon incubation project up and running. The teachers had the option of receiving eggs from a state-run hatchery near Anchorage or finding a way to source them locally.

Mr. Slingsby and Mrs. Scherer decided they wanted to get local eggs and asked for Lean's assistance. "We were delighted to help," Lean said. NSEDC was already taking salmon eggs from the Snake River as part of its Fisheries and Research Development Program effort to re-establish a Coho salmon run in Anvil Creek near Nome. A tiny amount of those eggs—fewer than 1 percent—were diverted to the school program. "It's a really small impact to our program in exchange for benefits for young students," Lean said.

In addition to giving the project more local relevance, sourcing the eggs from the Snake River provided another important advantage-the salmon raised by the students can be spared when the project concludes. Had the project been conducted with hatchery-produced eggs, the classes would have had to kill any surviving fish at the end of the year. "It's a real bummer for students at the end of the year to kill what they had worked hard to nurture throughout the school year," Lean said.

By using eggs from the Snake River, the classes can potentially release the surviving fish back into the wild at the end of the year. "The plan is to release them into the Snake River in the springtime and hopefully get a couple spawners to return in a few years," Mr. Slingsby said.

A closer look

Allowing more than just observation, the project has also required the students to roll up their sleeves and get their hands dirty. NSEDC biologists Lean and Keith returned to the classrooms in late January and early February with enough white fish to allow the students to pair up and perform dissections.

White fish are a salmonid—meaning they are similar to salmon—that are abundant in the region. By getting a chance to look at the white fish from the inside, the students gained a better understanding of the fish growing in the school's tanks. "Basic anatomy is applicable to medical, physical health and biological education," Lean said. "At the first- and second-grade level we don't get into college-level physiology, we just talk about the basic organs and their functions."

After Keith and Lean performed a quick dissection in front of a camera so the entire class could see the action on the classroom's large digital whiteboard, the students were paired up and given their own white fish—already sliced open—to dissect and examine. The kids jumped into the project with varying degrees of comfort. "In Nikki's class, she had told them before I got there, 'Any time you feel like saying, Ooh, gross. You say, Oh, how interesting.' I heard, 'Oh, how interesting.' a fair amount," Keith said.

Whether the students were squeamish or eager to dig their hands into the slimy fish innards, they all approached the project with a sense of excitement and enthusiasm. "Really, all the kids were into it. They would dig in there and find organs and pull stuff out," Keith said. "There wasn't really anyone who was not getting involved. They were all poking and prying and pulling."

That the first- and second-graders are likely too young to understand the finer details of biology doesn't mean they are not old enough to gain a valuable lesson from dissecting the fish. "I think it's kind of amazing to me that we're doing this with first-and second-graders. I didn't do that until I was a ninth-grader," Keith said. "It was actually really good, the students were open to it. There's certainly a lot they can take away, in terms of fish anatomy and animal anatomy. These are organs that are in all animals."

Both NSEDC biologists said the students were well prepared by Mr. Slingsby and Mrs. Scherer before the their arrival in the classrooms for the dissections. "The kids were pretty up to speed," Keith said. "Looking at the outsides of the fish, the students could generally find the parts themselves. When looking at the fish from the inside they would ask, 'Is that the heart? Is that the liver?' Clearly the teachers had done a lot of prep work."

A visit to Mr. Slingsby's classroom a full two weeks after the dissection showed that the lesson was one that stuck. In rapid succession, the second-graders rattled off a long list of salmon facts and highlights they had noted from the project up to that point.

Clearly, the dissection project had left the biggest impression with the budding young fisheries biologists. "You just want to look inside the fish and see what stuff is inside," second-grader Sarah Wade said. "I liked the stomach," her classmate, Ethan Mostoller, elaborated. "We found mostly bugs."

A battle on the horizon

While the dissection was the highlight of the project as of yet, a promised attraction to come had the students equally excited. "What's going to happen when the Coho get bigger?" Mr. Slingsby asked his class. "They're going to start doing the war," second-grader Owen Johanson responded. The rest of the class chimed in, "The war!" as they smiled and fidgeted with anticipation

The little silvers are not the only fish in the younger students' tank. Lean and NSEDC also provided a small number of chum salmon for the project. The chum, which develop earlier than the silver salmon, allowed the students to see larger fish earlier on in the project. Once the silvers catch up in size, however, the role of the chum in the tank is destined to take a mortal turn. The most voracious of salmon, the silvers will view the chum less as neighbors and more as lunch.

Eager for the carnage, the students also understand that having one species serve as a food source for another is part of a greater life cycle. Asked if they would be sad to see the little chum turned into fish-food for the Coho, the students gave a resounding no. "That's what nature is all about," second-grader Ada Lawrence said.

Lessons go beyond science

While a valuable resource for studying all things science, the little swimmers in the tank have also served as a springboard for writing themes, math assignments, cultural discussions and art projects. Mrs. Scherer said the tactile nature of the salmon project has served her students well. "It's good to have as many hands-on activities as possible," she said. "They like having something they can see and actively observe."

Those observations helped spur a descriptive writing project in which many of the first graders recalled past fishing trips. Some wrote about their impressions of the classroom fish tank. The essays were hung in the school's main hallway for all to see.

Mrs. Scherer also said the class has had discussions where students could talk about their fishing experiences or how their families catch and use fish. Some talk about seine nets, while others bring up fish racks. Mr. Slingsby's class is planning on letting some students' family members show exactly what they do with their fish. "We are going to have a big fish cook off by having families bring in their favorite salmon recipes and cook them in the kitchen outside of our classroom. It's going to be a fish feast," Mr. Slingsby said.

The second-graders are also planning on making fish prints as an art project. Mrs. Scherer's first-graders already did a similar project earlier this year.

The older students in Mr. Conger's class have done life-size drawings of the fish, both to decorate the area around their tank as well as expand their knowledge base. Mr. Conger has also used the project as an opportunity for the students to practice their public speaking skills by presenting their findings to fellow students. "When there's big changes in the tank, we get other classes to come in and view them," he said. "My fifth-grade reading class acted as tour guides for the other students."

While the salmon have spurred lessons of all sorts, the greatest benefit of the hands-on project is perhaps the spark for learning it has ignited in the students. "Overall, they're talking about fish," Mrs. Scherer said. "I don't know if you would call it an appreciation or an understanding, but the students are really interested in the fish."

"I Know I Can" has second graders thinking about their future!

Last month Nome elementary school second graders had an opportunity to focus on their futures with the second annual "I Know I Can" Program.

Geared for students in second grade, the program focuses on local volunteers sharing their personal college and career experiences with the students.

Mari Lammer, Matt Slingsby and Rita Smith's classes welcomed six local volunteers to share information about their occupations and their experiences of going to college or training after high school.

Through this sharing and reading of the "I Know I Can" book, students were encouraged to develop career interests, work hard in school and start thinking of college now. A highlight of the program asks students to draw a picture on a postcard showing what they want to be when they grow up. The postcards are collected and then mailed back to the students two years later, as a reminder of their goals and the event.

Each event ends with students sharing their dreams and their post-card with the class. Some students desire becoming teachers, state troopers, dentists, Marines and mechanics, among many other interesting and exciting occupations. Each student also receives a copy of the "I Know I Can" book to take home.

The UA College Savings Plan fully funds the event, with operational support from the Alaska Commission on Postsecondary Education and coordination through the UAF- Northwest Campus. "Additional I Know I Can" events are planned in the upcoming months in second grade classrooms throughout the region.

If you have any questions about the program, would like to see the program in your child's classroom, or are interested in volunteering, please get in touch with Kacey Miller at UAF-Northwest Campus.

Community Outreach Award

Former PBS host donates artifacts from Point Hope to UAF museum

Steve Thomas, the former host of PBS' "This Old House" donated a collection of items from Point Hope to the University of Alaska Museum of the North's ethnology collection.

The items include a sewing kit with a sealskin leather needle case that threads through an ivory tube; scrapers dangling from the end and sealskin boots with bearded seal bottoms and sheepskin liners that are probably from the 1880s. A sealskin scabbard possibly served as a quiver, but more likely sheathed a rifle.

The items come from the personal collection of Thomas' grandfather, Rev. William Thomas, who served as a missionary in Point Hope from 1914 until 1926, where he purchased the pieces or received them as gifts. Thomas also donated a sizable collection of photographs and journals.

Nome artist's painting featured on AlaskaOne 2011 poster

Nome artist Sue Steinacher's painting "Akpiks & Imuruk" is featured on the annual AlaskaOne poster, to help out with the annual public television fundraiser. The 40-by-29-inch oil painting was done for the 2010 Percent for Art program, and hangs in the Nome Youth Facility. The inspiration, Steinacher says, "was a scene on the road from Nome to Teller which crosses high rolling hills that, in summer, are often thick with 'akpiks' – the Inupiaq word for salmonberries or cloudberries. From one spot in particular, the extraordinary Imuruk Basin, tucked-up beneath the north face of the Kigluaik Mountains, is just visible." This piece was chosen by a panel of artists and experts from more than 110 pieces submitted by 44 Alaskan artists.

been selected to receive AkASL's School Library Community Outreach Award for 2011.

Rural Alaska offers many challenges and obstacles to developing and promoting literacy. School librarians know how important reading, literacy and life-long learning are to the health of a community. Most communities develop a number of programs to serve community development of literacy, but rarely does one person work to bridge these programs with the school. Joy Hewitt does just that.

The Alaska Association of School

Librarians announced that Joy Hewitt of Nome Elementary School has Joy's accomplishments may be best be described by Marsha Sloan, Nome Eskimo Council, "Nome, like many small communities in Alaska, can be a challenge to really make effective change when you often hear, 'we've tried that' or 'that won't work here." Joy has overcome all of those obstacles and barriers with grace, poise and efficiency in her quest to overturn illiteracy and create readers. It goes without saying that these efforts have direct impact on our school district test scores and other measurable accomplishments. But the biggest impact that I see is on the love of reading and learning in our youth."

She has been an active member of the local Literacy Council for several years, where she has managed the Imagination Library for children ages birth to five years, enthusiastically recruiting little readers through community outreach.

When the local tribal organization wanted to start a Guys Read program it was Joy who took on the task. She implemented Guys Read and Girls Read through the local public library and carried it over to the schools.

According to the tribal spokesperson, she used her talent at making posters of all of the high school sports teams, and to highlight local Native men as role models for reading in the Guys Read program.

Joy even hosts Popcorn Sundays at her own home, when local kids can drop by her house for free popcorn and some hangout time with Lizzie, her beloved black lab.

As Marsha Sloan states, "In my opinion, Ms. Hewitt is an integral member of the education team at each of the public schools in Nome. She is also a true advocate for early literacy awareness for our community and the surrounding region."

The Alaska School Library Association is proud to share the accomplishments of the Nome community, and most of all school librarian Joy Hewitt!

Nome - Beltz boys basketball heads to state tournament

The Nome Boys basketball team qualified for the 2011 Class 3A State Tournament by placing second at the Western Conference Basketball Tournament. The Nome boys defeated Hooper Bay and Bethel before losing in the Western Conference Finals to Barrow. The Nanooks' appearance in the Western Conference Championship game marked the fifth straight year that the Nanooks have played in the championship game. Due to the loss to Barrow the Nanooks then had to play Bethel on the final day of the tournament for second place and a bid to the State Tournament. Individual game results are listed below. The Nanooks will next face #1 ranked Monroe Catholic on Thursday, March 17, at the Sullivan Arena in Anchorage. Nome Seniors David Stickel and Tim Sullivan have reached the State Tournament in each of their four seasons.

The Nome boys defeated Bethel on Saturday night to claim second place at the Western Conference Tournament and a bid to the Class 3A State Tournament. Nome found itself down 10 points at the half to a Bethel team that made 8-11 threepoint field goals in the first half. Bethel was then able to quickly extend the lead to 15 early in the third quarter before Nome staged a rally to close to within 2 by the end of the third quarter. Christian Leckband scored 32 points and grabbed 16 rebounds to lead the Nanooks. Nathan Blandford recorded a "double-double" by scoring 11 points and grabbing 10 rebounds before fouling out in the fourth quarter. Tim Sullivan scored 17 points, including 5 three-point field goals. Christian Leckband passed a personal milestone during the game as he surpassed the 1,000 career point mark during the 2nd quarter of the game. The win also gave the Nome boys their 5th consecutive "20 win season."

chute. Busch was chosen to be this year's honorary musher for his contributions to the Iditarod as a board member and in his capacity working for Radio KNOM and supporting the race by encouraging complete coverage from starting banquet to finishers banquet and everything in between. Busch served as KNOM's general manager and later as the station's development director. He had been an Iditarod board member and had followed the race from day one. Florence Busch said that Tom compiled Iditarod trail diaries, blow-byblow reports of the race, over a 25-year period.

KNOM station manager Ric Schmidt was also there, shaking hand warmers for Florence Busch in preparation of her sled ride in the Jr. Iditarod champion Jeremiah Klejka's basket. "Tom has been a very big supporter of the race and had tremendous institutional knowledge," said Schmidt. "This knowledge will be greatly missed this year."

Northwest mushers in the race

Nome's Melissa Owens is on the trail again on her second running of the Iditarod sled dog race. The 21year-old daughter of Mike and Pat Owens grew up in Nome dog mushing and moved to Southcentral Alaska to attend school. In the summer, she works as a ranger assistant at the Hatcher Pass Recreational Park. Owens said she trains her dogs in the fall and winter out of Knik. Owens said she is running a young team of dogs with a few dogs that were part of her team in the 2008 Iditarod. "They're young, inexperienced and strong - and here we go!" she described her 2011 Iditarod team. Her father, Mike Owens, said several of her team members were born and raised in Nome and they know the wind and harsh conditions. "The main thing is to get them to the coast, and from there they'll know the way," said Mike Owens.

At 2 a.m. Tuesday Owens scratched. She re-injured her leg during her run from Willow to Rainey Pass. She had injured her leg before the race began. She had 14 dogs on her team when she made the decision to scratch.

Paul Johnson, 53, of Unalakleet is back to the race after a 25-year hiatus from his first Iditarod race. His brother William "Middi" Johnson ran the Iditarod last year and their older brother Henry ran the race in 1980. "Henry was named after our grandfather Henry Ivanoff, who was one of the serum mushers and took the serum from Shaktoolik to Norton Bay," said Paul Johnson. Johnson said that while the brothers have no plan to alternate running the race, he decided to do it this year. "The dogs love to run and it would've been a shame to leave them at home. So, we put a team together and here we are,' he said at the start line. He said he is involved in the local dog races in Unalakleet and plans to raise sled dogs in the future. Johnson said that in the best-case scenario, his expectations are to finish under the burled arch in 10 days. "I think that is reasonable as long as the weather is cool and things work out for us and that's if we have a clean run and if I do the right things," Johnson said. In addition to high protein meat, fat, kibble and fish snacks, Johnson's dogs will dine on a secret dog food. "For myself, I have both Native foods and western foods — more than I can eat. I don't think that any of us will go hungry," Johnson laughed.

Another musher continuing the family tradition is 26-year old Mike Williams, Jr. of Akiak. His father Mike Williams, Sr. ran the Iditarod 14 times, the last time in 2009. Williams Junior embarked on his first Iditarod in 2010 and finished in 26th place after 10 days and six hours and some on the trail. Mike Junior said that training for him started a bit late in the season because he worked until late fall and didn't start up training the dogs in earnest until the third week of November. But, he said, his dad had already started training the team and for the rest of the winter, they had decent snow cover and training conditions. This paid off with the strong run Mike Williams, Jr. put on in the Kuskokwim 300 race, where he took second place, only one minute after the winning team of Paul Gebhardt. Williams said that there are about 44 dogs in the Williams' kennel, including 10 retirees, 10 pups and that leaves 20 dogs in training for the races. Mike Junior said that his team consists mostly of veterans and four dogs who haven't done a 1,000-mile endurance race. "I have a fairly solid group," Mike Junior said quietly at the start line. "They all recovered well from the Kusko, they have good feet and their appetite is exceptional." He said his goal is to make a few improvements over last year. "But my real goal is to finish with as many dogs as I can, hopefully, higher up in the ranks," Mike Junior said.

Kotzebue's John Baker entered the Iditarod for the 15th time this year. The seasoned musher seemed to not share in the general hectic pace and excitement at the Anchorage ceremonial start line. He said that his strategy this year will be different from years past. In the Kotzebue area, a stormy winter has made for difficult training conditions. "I will have to run a more conservative race," said Baker. "I will hold back in the beginning with shorter runs and I'm trying to keep a peppier team." He said that the first part likely too warm for the taste of the coastal dogs used to cold winds would be tough on them. Baker finished last year in fifth place and has his eyes set on the ultimate prize. "My goal is to win. Just to win, whatever it takes," Baker said.

Teams from north and western Alaska are Peter Kaiser of Bethel and Robert Nelson of Kotzebue.

Contenders

Defending champion Lance Mackey has his mind set on making it five in a row. That would put him on equal footing with Rick Swenson, so far the only five-time champion in the history of the race. The 2011 Iditarod marks the 35th year of Swenson running the race and only 10 races didn't see him in the top 10 group of finishers. On Monday, one day into the race, Swenson was injured while navigating the infamously dangerous Happy River steps. According to Iditarod blogger Bruce Lee, Swenson broke his collarbone, but it wasn't apparent yet if he decided to scratch from the race.

While Mackey has sat out this year's Yukon Quest, other teams are race hardened and eager to give Mackey a good run for the money. Dallas Seavey, former champion Mitch Seavey's son, won the 2011 Quest and showed a strong team.

Hugh Neff, who left the ceremonial start line with Dr. Seuss's Cat in the Hat in the sled, was leading the Quest race for the most part before he withdrew from the race when he accepted outside assistance. Neff finished in ninth place in the Iditarod last year. Canadian Sebastian Schnuelle finished the Yukon Quest in second place - after helping fellow musher Hans Gatt out of a fix when he broke through deep overflow. Schnuelle simply said his goal is to win the Iditarod. Gatt, also of Canada, finished in second place last year and is a serious contender to take home the first place prize money of $50,400. And certainly fans need to keep an eye on Paul Gebhardt, who won this year's Kuskokwim 300.

While many aging mushers are now behind the scenes, their dogs still get to go up the trail with different jockeys. The oldest musher at 65 is New Zealander Bob Storey, also a rookie, who drives a team out of Vern Halter's kennel to Nome. Scotland's Wattie MacDonald leased a team from Dean Osmar and made a grand appearance at the ceremonial start with a band of bag pipes preceding his team to the start line. MacDonald as well as his handlers were brave-hearted enough to wear kilts and no long underwear. Also notable is that Trent Herbst is running a team with dogs from Jake Berkowitz, who won the Copper Basin 300 and ran the same dogs in the Fur Rondy sprint races a week ago. Last but not least, Scotty Jansen, a rookie from Kasilof entered the race touting his niche as being the "mushing mortician." This was advertised on his quite sizable dog trailer, pulled by a black Hummer.

Paul Gebhardt scratched in Nikolai for the best interest of his team on Tuesday, March 8.

Why doctors volunteer to go to Haiti

By Bob Lawrence, MD Photos courtesy of

Alaska Family Doctor

Last week I had the opportunity to travel to Haiti with a medical relief team facilitated by the Haiti Christian Development Program, a nonprofit development foundation based in Little Rock, Arkansas. During this trip I had the privilege of working alongside an amazing group of medical providers and medical students who regularly donate a portion of their skill and time to work in underdeveloped countries like Haiti.

I spoke with many of these providers about why they take time away from their personal practices to come to Haiti. Their answers give insight into the hearts and minds of many doctors in America today.

"One of the things I've seen over the last several years is that more and more doctors are doing this type of trip," says Hank Farrar, a physician who serves as director of the pediatric residency program at Arkansas Children's Hospital, "Years ago when I was in medical school people thought you were a little bit crazy if they found out you were going to do something like this. Now a lot of people do it. I think it's because people have started to realize there's more to life than just their day-today work."

Mike Justus, a family practice physician from Searcy, Arkansas agrees, "You know, if I don't come, my world gets very small. Life becomes six in the morning to ten at night going down the same street back and forth working in the same exam rooms. I forget that the world is much bigger than that."

There is a sense in which this type of service is a part of the Hippocratic oath says David Smith, a cardiologist with Heart Clinic Arkansas. "It's giving back to the profession what you have been given. It's a professional mandate since you have been blessed with this education. You are not a product of yourself. You are a product of your community, a larger community.'

Dr. Smith is in many ways the brains and heart behind HCDP, which has established an impressive array of relief programs. In addition to medical relief work, HCDP supports an educational farm, a microloan program, a feeding program, and a community development program currently constructing new homes for people displaced by the 2010 earthquake.

Smith describes a spiritual basis for the development of HCDP. A devout Christian, Smith believes his work among the poor is a part of what he describes as "a mandate for Christians." Smith says, "We want to follow the example of the master. Certainly he went about healing and restoring people throughout his life. So if we want to be like him and we've been given the opportunity to be a healer, then we want to give that

Many of the doctors commented on how their volunteer work is driven by a spiritual commitment. "I like reaching across cultures and finding things I have in common with the whole brotherhood of man," says Brian Alexander, an anesthesiologist at the Arkansas Heart Hospital. "I like seeing people's needs and meeting those needs one-on-one. It's easy to send money, and I do that some. But sometimes it's good to get dirty and rub shoulders with the people—to observe their needs and love them and reach across cultures with Christ's love."

"Here there is an opportunity to touch on the whole spiritual aspect of life that gets lost in the background noise of work at home," says Justus. "The need is not always in the prescription. The need is in the among the poor is extremely rewarding. "I really enjoy my work at home, but I can honestly say this type of work is the most satisfying medicine that I practice," says Alexander. "It makes me more compassionate. It changes me. There are reasons I come that have nothing to do with medicine. It makes me a better husband and father. I get away from the materialistic side of society. It makes me more compassionate. And it translates into my work back home."

"As a specialist you begin to get more sensitive to smaller issues,' says Smith who describes how work in Haiti affects his work as a cardiologist in the United States. "You become very aware of poverty again and more tuned into the fact that you need to try to provide affordable health care because you too have an indigent population at home. It's not just in Haiti.'

"I think it helps makes me a better doctor," says Farrar, "because I become much more reliant on my clinical skills. I can't just read numbers off a report from the laboratory because there is no laboratory. We become much more reliant on our physical exam skills and thinking through problems rather than reflexively relying on tests."

Smith often takes medical students on trips to Haiti. "These medical students and residents, most of them, have never been in a third world country. For them to even think about medical missions they continued on page 12 fersonville High School, Jeffersonville, Indiana. He found work and remained a number of years at a Sheraton in French Lick as a hotel bellhop. Perhaps it was parking those stylin' cars that got him interested and thus developed a fascination for the mechanical crafts.

Dave dreamed of coming to Alaska, and he chose Nome. Employed by Jim West, Sr., he worked as apprentice to Marvin Bejornseth in the body shop at Alaska Cab Garage in the early 1990s, until several years later, he moved to Rodney Jones' shop. Dave worked for RJ continuously at RJ's Auto since 1999, along with Chris Thornton, and most recently Ricky Larsen.

Dave could fix just about anything, and gave of his talents freely and generously. Never much concerned for himself, anything he had was shared including his money, his skills with some tattered tools, and his time, which was about everything he had in life to give. Dave's meticulousness in his workmanship and perfectionism in the end product he always achieved, but seldom bragged. He sometimes would quietly mention, "This truck turned out pretty good, pretty damn good." When one went to pick up a vehicle he had labored over, it was like getting a brand new truck. Dave dabbled in painting snowmachine cowlings, and once customized Melissa K. Ford's "Ford" helmet with a "Chevy" emblem. For many, many hours over the past couple years, Dave and RJ have been working on "The Toy." The Toy is a late model Chevy pickup converted with lift kits, a tilt bed, and front-end tip out. Dave put the finishing touches on The Toy, in brushes and strokes of cinnamon orange. It is no wonder he has been Nome's only body man all these years, and no one did it better than him.

Dave had a number of little sayings, and if it wasn't a joke he was sharing, it was one of his expressions that went like: "Look good, feel good, am good, damn good." Others were: "It's my world, thank you for participating. My world, my rules, my life, and you're in it Kid. Call you Kid, because I can." "If you don't love me today, you're not going to like me tomorrow." "Do you want to talk, or do you want to listen?" "WHAT EVER!" And, be sure to throw your hair back, says

If we can take anything away from the loss of our friend, it would be to live life by Dave's example: care deeply for your friends, share and give freely of yourself, give it your all, laugh loud, and often.

Preceding Dave in death were his parents, Homer and Mary; sisters Alice and Philis-Darlean, and brothers Bob and Kenny. Family members surviving are sisters Mary and June of Florida, Doris of French Lick, Indiana; brothers Leroy, French Lick, Charlie, Louisville, Kentucky; brother Terry, nephew David Allen Wininger and nieces Sunny Rae Wininger and Leela Ann Campbell of Paoli, Indiana.

Dave's ashes will be shared between Nome and Indiana. RJ promises to take him over to Hawaii, where he dreamed of starting his own surf board business.

need to have an introduction."

Megan Lyerly, a medical student from the University of Arkansas, who joined the team this year, describes how the trip to Haiti affected her perspective of health care. "I feel like we are our brother's keeper. A lot of times in America we get bogged down with the health care system. You know medicine is not as easy as it should be and here in Haiti it's all about treating the people and making their life better. It's a more simplistic view of medicine and the way it should be.'

Lyerly's husband, Shane Lyerly,

also a medical student adds, "It's a reminder that even back home we really don't understand what people may be going through."

"This is my first experience as a medical student having some autonomy," says Madison Orsburn, a medical student also from the University of Arkansas, "Throughout medical school there is always someone looking over my shoulder. This is the first time that I had a chance to think things through myself."

Orsburn says he is motivated by what he calls "the positive smile sign," a phrase he coined after treating an elderly woman with severe arthritis of the knees, "After doing a knee injection I saw her smile and the light in her eyes. That's the relief she came looking for and when I leave here she's still going to have that relief and that smile.'

When asked if the work in Haiti validates his choice to become a pediatrician, Orsburn described a long day of seeing children with various mild problems, "then you get that kid just covered in scabies and you know they're miserable and you think 'I can do something for this.' That's a good feeling, when you feel you can actually help someone."

For doctors who have practiced medicine for a long time, working among the poorest people in the western hemisphere is a reminder of days when the practice of medicine came with a sense of mission. "There is a language change and a semantic difference between the way we talked about medicine 30 years ago and today," says Justus, "If you sat down with a group and talked about it now the discussion is performance-based and productivitybased instead of asking are we better people and are our patients better people because of the work we do

In one week, this small band of medical providers treated over 2,000 people in hot, dusty, remote clinics in and around Gonaives, Haiti. The work was hard. But every one of those providers says they will return. As Smith says, "Once you come down and establish friendships, those friendships get deeper and deeper every year. And you want to see these friends again. In a small way you want to bring your cool cup of water that nobody else throughout the year is providing for them.

Insider Language
I was recently watching the movie "The Invention of Lying" and was struck by the movie's take on various scriptures including John 14: 1-14. I should also warn parents this is not a movie for young kids, as there is much humor of a sexual nature. But what struck me about this movie was that it really made Christianity sound silly. I researched this movie as well as its writer and star Ricky Gervais a bit and found out that he is an avowed atheist and has said in promoting this movie that he felt religion had started as a lie that had just gotten out of hand. This movie was in part based on that

After studying the passage a bit I was struck by the amount of "insider language" that it contains. Jesus has the following to say: "Do not let your hearts be troubled this passage tells us. Believe in God, believe also in me." So far so good. Then he says: "In my Father's house there are many dwelling-places." And that's where we get into trouble with insider language. If we take this verse on face value and think that there are literal houses, we open ourselves up for the criticism leveled at Christians in this movie. Every person having a mansion certainly is appealing. Similar promises have worked for politicians such as Huey Long's slogan "Every Man a King!" But when we're talking mansions in heaven it just seems a little, well, silly. And Jesus continues with insider language. "I am the way, the truth, and the life." This makes perfect sense to those of us who have spent years in the Church. Have we ever stopped to think what we sound like to those outside the Church? It's no wonder that there are now two generations essentially missing from the Church.

We believe God has commanded us to make Disciples of Jesus Christ. If we are going to be faithful to this command we have to be careful when using insider language. The Bible was written to specific communities. Some of the Bible was written in this insider language to avoid additional persecution. But in their day the audience knew what the language meant. That's not the case today. For instance in the Hebrew culture, location doesn't necessarily mean a place but the closeness of a relationship. The way doesn't necessarily mean the path somewhere - in Hebrew tradition it meant the route to Jerusalem. Wisdom literature also used "the way" as it contrasted the way of the wise to the way of the wicked or foolish. The Bible's original audience understood this. Do we?

So what does all this mean to us who just want to be faithful? We must communicate the Gospel message of God's redemption of humanity through Jesus Christ using language that people understand. Our message must communicate the meaning of this passage that Jesus Christ invites us to join in his relationship with God and the Holy Spirit, and that there is room in that relationship for all of us. All we have to do is ask.

Legal Notice

Important information about the $3.4 billion Indian Trust Settlement

For current or former IIM account holders, Owners of land held in trust or restricted status, or their heirs

There is a proposed Settlement in Cobell v. Salazar, a class action lawsuit about individual Indian land held in trust by the federal government. This notice is just a summary. For details, call the toll-free number or visit the website listed below.

The lawsuit claims that the federal government violated its duties by (a) mismanaging trust funds/assets, (b) improperly accounting for those funds, and (c) mismanaging trust land/assets. The trust funds include money collected from farming and grazing leases, timber sales, mining, and oil and gas production from land owned by American Indians/Alaska Natives.

If you are included in the Settlement, your rights will be affected. To object to the Settlement, to comment on it, or to exclude yourself, you should get a detailed notice at www.IndianTrust.com or by calling 1-800-961-6109.

Can I get money?

There are two groups or "Classes" in the Settlement eligible for payment. Each Class includes individual IIM account holders or owners of land held in trust or restricted status who were alive on September

Historical Accounting Class Members

- · Had an open individual Indian Money account ("IIM") anytime between October 25, 1994 and September 30, 2009, and
- The account had at least one cash transaction.
- · Includes estates of account holders who died as of September 30, 2009, if the IIM account was still open

Trust Administration Class Members

- · Had an IIM account recorded in currently available data in federal government systems any time from approximately 1985 to September 30, 2009, or
- Owned trust land or land in restricted status as of September 30, 2009.
- Includes estates of landowners who died as of September 30, 2009 where the trust interests were in probate as of that date. This means you have asked a court to transfer ownership of the deceased landowner's property.

An individual may be included in one or both Classes.

What does the Settlement provide?

- A $1.5 billion fund to pay those included in the Classes
- A $1.9 billion fund to buy small interests in trust or
- restricted land owned by many people. Up to $60 million to fund scholarships to improve
- access to higher education for Indian youth.

  A government commitment to reform the Indian trust management and accounting system.
  - How much can I get?
- Historical Accounting Class Members will each get $1,000.
- Trust Administration Class Members will get at least
- If you own a small parcel of land with many other people, the federal government may ask you to sell it. You will be offered fair market value. If you sell your land it will be returned to tribal control

If you believe you are a member of either Class and are not receiving IIM account statements, you will need to call the toll-free number or visit the website to register.

What are my other rights?

- If you wish to keep your right to sue the federal government about the claims in this Settlement, you must exclude yourself by April 20, 2011.

  If you stay in the Settlement you can object to or
- comment on it by April 20, 2011. The detailed notice explains how to exclude yourself or object/comment.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia will hold a hearing on June 20, 2011, to consider whether to approve the Settlement. It will also consider a request for attorneys' fees, costs, and expenses in the amount of $99.9 million. However, Class Counsel has fee agreements that would pay them 14.75% of the funds created for the Classes, which could result in an award of $223 million. The Court may award more or less than these amounts based on controlling law. If approved, these payments and related costs will come out of the Settlement funds available for payment to Class

If you wish, you or your own lawyer may ask to appear and speak at the hearing at your own cost. For more information, call or go to the website shown below or write to Indian Trust Settlement, P.O. Box 9577, Dublin, OH 43017-4877.

Awesome! John Baker shatters Iditarod race record

By Diana Haecker

Hundreds and hundreds of people lined Nome's Front Street to see Kotzebue musher John Baker be the first musher in this year's Iditarod Trail sled dog race to cross the finish line in Nome. The rising sun cast golden light into the finish chute as Baker and his ten dogs made their way under the burled arch. Along with Baker's family, race officials and selected media, drummers and singers with the band Pamyua were on hand to provide the soundtrack to an emotional finish that had Baker's family in tears. Cheers, drumming and the unique walrus whoop made by Eskimo fans filled the cold air.

This was Baker's 16th Iditarod Trail sled dog race. He has made the top ten in 11 races and now he not only won the race for the first time but also made history by setting a new race record of eight days, 18 hours, 46 minutes and 39 seconds on the trail. Baker shaved off exactly four hours of the record set in 2002 by Martin Buser. Baker said that he had no thoughts on breaking any records and that it didn't dawn on him until Tuesday morning that he might actually do so. He went even further and said that he didn't allow himself to think about winning until he was actually under the burled arch as the first musher. "When Martin set the record, that year, I was in third place and my good friend Ramy Brooks coming in second, that was a special year to me. But now, breaking the record is icing on the cake," Baker said.

After Baker was checked in and signed off on having finished the race, sponsor dignitaries handed him his $50,400 winner's check and the key to a brand new Dodge Ram truck. With this year's win, Baker ended Lance Mackey's four-year string of victories and Lance's wife Tonya made it through the crowd, into the finish chute to congratulate Baker on his achievement.

Sitting on the winner's pedestal, Baker cradled his lead dogs, Velvet and Snickers. He said he had been running these two dogs in lead for all of last year's Iditarod race. He added that this year he had switched out the leaders at times and gave Velvet a break for two runs.

"I'm a pretty lazy musher, it's just too easy to leave them in lead all the way," Baker said.

Asked if he had been looking out for Ramey Smyth to catch up to him along the coast, Baker said that Smyth did keep him on his toes, as he is the best in the business of catching and passing teams by the end of a race. But Baker had confidence in the strength of his dogs. "This team wasn't as strong as last

On Monday, NovaGold Resources Inc. announced the sale of 11,500 acres of Alaska Gold Company lands around Nome.

The buyer is Nome Gold Alaska Corporation. "We are executing our strategy of bringing value from our non-core assets," NovaGold president and CEO Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse said in a press release. He said that NovaGold is focused on advancing its Donlin and Galore projects toward production.

The alluvial gold properties sold are fee-simple United States patented mining claims. The claims are held by Alaska Gold Company. Nome Gold Alaska Corp. will pay Alaska Gold $21 million in three installments and provide a letter of credit for $4 million as an environmental reclamation bond.

NovaGold is also looking for buyers of their land holdings around Nome, in-town real estate lots, sand and gravel holdings, as well as its Rock Creek and Big Hurrah gold properties.

Sheldon Katchatag of Unalakleet was delighted at the prospect that a fellow Inupiaq was in contention to win this year's Iditarod Trail Sled dog race. Katchatag awakened as many Unalakleet residents as he could. He convinced about a hundred people to climb out of their beds on Sunday morning before 5 o'clock to welcome Kotzebue's John Baker into the first Iditarod checkpoint on the coast. Addressing the crowd Katchatag declared, "He's going to win this thing. He's got the support of all the Inupiat from here to Greenland behind him."

Katchatag was dressed in polar bear mukluks handed down from his father, polar bear mittens and a white parka. He held a drum made by his son. And when the light of Baker's headlamp bobbed across the frozen Unalakleet River, Katchatag began drumming and calling out to the approaching dog team. The crowd joined in with clapping, whistling and hollering to usher in the first Iditarod musher to their village.

Baker's 11 dogs marched into the assigned parking spot and before the musher had the chance to get off the sled runners, the crowd surrounded him and Wells Fargo dignitaries presented him with the Gold Coast award and gold nuggets worth $2,500.

Taking the lead on the Yukon

At the start line in Anchorage, John Baker said he would take it easy in the first part of the race. He said that training this winter had been hampered by one blizzard after another. The strategy seemed to have paid off, as Baker's dogs seemed to have found their groove on the Yukon. Baker made his move when he passed Hugh Neff who led the front-runners out of Grayling on the Yukon. "That was the only team we passed," a tired Baker said with a chuckle in Unalakleet. "Usually, everybody else is passing us." Not this time. Baker said his dog team started to come together nicely and found their rhythm in Shageluk. From the checkpoint of Eagle Island on, Baker remained in front of the pack, but it was not a comfort-

Dear Editor,

Sarah Palin does not represent Alaska. She abandoned Alaska as Governor with only two years of governorship. She would not use the Governor's mansion in Juneau (the capital of Alaska). She wanted the capital moved to her area in the Anchorage bowl area. She ignored the Aleuts, Eskimos, Indians and Americans who came to Alaska from all over the world to help establish a free nation.

My grandfather, Richard T. Harris and Joe Juneau were allowed to explore for gold directed by chief Chowee of the Auk Quan tribe at Juneau. Our family, the Harris', is half Tlinget and Scotch Irish. We, like many people from all over the world helped build America.

From the 1900s to the beginning of the World War II, the prejudice towards people from all over the world was real bad. World War II has diminished the prejudice considerably. Some people still are prejudiced of people of other countries. (America was built by people of other countries of the world).

Many people from the Anchorage bowl came westward to Alaska via the Alaska Highway after World War II or flew and had no knowledge of Southeast Alaska. Just the old timers knew the real history.

My younger brother, Casey, was born in Juneau in 1936 and I, W. John Harris Jr. was born in Juneau in 1930. I have lived in Anchorage since 1971, but go back to Juneau whenever I have enough money to travel with my oldest son W. John Harris III. The only other grandchild from my Uncle Dick's family, Lila Haley Harris, still lives in Juneau. Her sisters and brothers are all deceased as well as my three brothers and five sisters. My father, W. John Harris Sr. was born in Juneau in 1884 and my Uncle Dick Harris was born in Juneau in 1886.

We Alaskans, Indians, Eskimos and Aleuts were really prejudiced against for many, many years like the Indians from the Lower 48 states and Canada. I knew many black people all my life who are and were wonderful people. There are Aleuts, Eskimos and Indians in our family history, where we're well known in the past. I spent part of the winter in Anchorage in 1953 after dropping out of school at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

Getting back to Sarah Palin, she abandoned Alaska and its people and she should not be considered for any high office in America and the news media should stop referring to her as Governor. Even her past running mate for President, John McCain, had stated on public TV that if Sarah Palin ran for President, he wasn't sure if he would vote for her or not. He is also messing up the real American way of life.

Sincerely, W. John Harris Jr. Anchorage, AK 99504

Dear Editor,

I attended the Elder and Youth Conference and I applaud the Youth. They did very well in representing their villages. They were a big help at the feast also.

I had the privilege of listening to our Tribal Healers as we had a good lunch at the Pioneer Hall. I perceived she is not treated as a professional like the rest of the Norton Sound Health Corporation employees. Although she never said anything to cut down I can sense it.

I have been to see her myself. Her little space is far removed from the rest of the clinic. I hope to heck there will be space for her in the new hospital, just like all our important professionals.

I doubt if her pay meets the quality of service she offers. If not I recommend at least at the minimum $30 an hour. I know professionals get much more. If she is not treated like she should be, we may lose her. She's too valuable to loose.

I hope the whole region supports her.

Sincerely,
Arlene Soxie

I had heard that Tyler Rhodes moved from the Nugget's staff to a job burnishing NSEDC's image. I was surprised however, that he used the format of an infomercial, masquerading as a newspaper column, in the Nugget's last issue, as a vehicle for his new employer.

There is no doubt that the subject of his column, Mr. Charles Lean, could benefit from Tyler's literary shoeshining skills. As a commercial fisherman I have felt like a long term hostage of Charlie's chronic mismanagement as a biologist, fisheries manager, and now fisheries developer.

The sad history of his tenure reads like a train wreck. Crashed salmon returns many times .Particularly the king and chum species. Crashed crab stocks. Slow to rebuild.

The collapse of red stocks at Salmon Lake by preemtively ending a successful fertilization program and starving smolt built up by previous years of fertilization. Last year's Salmon Lake returns due to this negligence are as close to extinction as it gets.

The last one to successfully rein Mr. Lean in was the honorable Governor Hickel. After millions lost to Norton Sound commercial fishermen and buyers, to late openings of the roe herring season, Hickel made Charlie go to Bristol Bay to intern with successful herring managers.

Getting it Together

It's the behind the scenes organizers who make the Month of Iditarod events a success. It may seem like herding cats, but it's the hard work and ceaseless planning efforts for each individual event that make it easy and stress free for the participants.

It's the folks who organize the set-up, the system and the clean-up who are often overlooked. It's the folks who communicate and coordinate the timetables and logistics to avoid confusion and allow for full public participation and enjoyment. It's the folks who do the long-range planning and communication who make any event a success, but the Iditarod also demonstrates how, after many years and another generation of organizers, the citizens of Nome can work together to have fun, renew old acquaintances and make new friendships.

It's the spirit of Iditarod the keeps us going. It's the willingness to work behind the scenes and do our own parts to show what a great spirit of cooperation connects all the communities of western Alaska. It's also what makes Nome a special community. We can be quite proud of our town. —N.L.M.—

Junkers, derelicts and land issues tackled by Planning Commission

By Nancy McGuire

The Nome Planning Commission met last Tuesday evening to hash over topics of concern. They took up the problem of dealing with junk vehicles. City Manager Josie Bahnke stated that the city tries to be nonconfrontational in asking owners to take their junked vehicles to the dump, "We hope to get more voluntary compliance." Commissioner Jimmy Adams stated that the City needs an administrative procedure in place, "People need an incentive to get rid of junked vehicles." The problem will be towed away at the next regular meeting of the Nome Planning Commission.

The junk vehicle problem opened the gate for comment about the abatement process and timeline for derelict buildings. Commissioners were concerned that little action had occurred to get rid of problem structures. The current procedure involves the issuance of a complaint that a particular building or structure constitutes a fire hazard, health hazard or public nuisance. The complaint can be initiated by the owner of the adjacent property. When the mayor, city engineer, police chief or city health official gets the complaint they send a report to city council and a time and place for a hearing is set to determine weather the report is correct. The owner is notified and legal notification procedures are carried out. The hearing should be two weeks after the notice is served and the council determines if the report is correct, then declares the structure to be removed or demolished by the owner. If the structure is not demolished within two weeks the city will remove it. The owner can request a rehearing, however the city will charge for the removal or demolition.

The commission previewed information on the classification of a future subdivision. Should Camp 5 be classified as a "major" or a "minor" subdivision? Is it a mineral survey or a parcel? The commissioners said they thought it would qualify as a "major" subdivision. Camp 5 subdivision is 27 acres in the area of the old Alaska Gold Camp along the Teller Highway to the south of the softball field.

The city manager reported the status of the Nome Bypass Road upgrade project.

• Twin Peaks Construction is slated to complete Phase II of the project from East N Street to the

Nome-Council Highway by July 31,

- The Bypass Road portion of the project was constructed last year and is substantially compete. The remaining work includes final grading, delineators, signs and seeding.
- The budget is tight. Although DOT/PF has not fully resolved the issue, there are already cost overruns on some bid items. It is unknown at this time if the funding will be adequate to complete the project.
- There is no funding at this time for a proposed bike path on the north

Nome Public Schools sets major goal: 90 percent of third graders to read at or above grade level by 2014

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Board of Education has established a major goal calling for 90 percent of Nome Elementary School's third graders to read at or above grade level by the end of third grade within three years—by the end of the 2014 school year. The action came with unanimous approval of "The 90 percent Reading Initiative" resolution at a meeting on March 8.

The 90 percent reading goal is an outgrowth of a 2010 visit by NPS teachers to the Kennewick School District in Washington State to learn ideas and strategies that have helped the district achieve and maintain Adequate Yearly Progress in its schools.

The resolution acknowledges that only 67 percent of NPS students district-wide meet state proficiency standards for language arts, according to 2010 test data. It also notes that early learning is the foundation for AYP success and that students who fail to read at grade level will fall further and further behind.

Following are key elements of the initiative as stated in the resolution.

- "NPS recognizes the need for providing professional development to staff to support the 90% reading Initiative.
- "NPS recognizes the need for annual growth and catch-up growth in reading for all students.
- "NPS will collect and analyze data on catch-up growth to assure students who are falling behind receive appropriate reading interventions.
- "NPS will implement structural changes to the academic schedule that reflect a commitment to dedicated, direct reading instruction time. All elementary students will receive at least 90-120 minutes of reading instruction each day. K-12 students requiring intervention will receive extra reading instruction.

Success in meeting the reading goal at the end of the 2014 school year will be measured by the student attaining at least a 40 percentile Progress test.

NPS Superintendent Jon Wehde described the resolution as a "seminal document" in his report to board members before they adopted the goal. He said NPS aspires to Kennewick's literacy rate in the high 80 and 90 percentiles. "We have far to go; many are behind and far below proficient in reading, but tonight we are taking a stand," he said. "We won't accept less than 90 percent literacy or know the reason why."

Wehde recognized NPS teachers and instructional aides for their work. He said a remarkable growth potential showed up in the 2010 Standards Based Assessment test results. (See an analysis of the 2010 SBA results from Wehde's written report on page 8.)

Nivy Brandt, the school board's student representative suggested that an assembly be held to let students know they did great in the 2010 SBA.

Board member Barb Amarok noted that Wehde's written report said four of five NPS schools made AYP in 2010. "Was it not three?" she asked. Wehde acknowledged that the Nome Youth Facility did not make AYP due to an error on the part of NPS and the record cannot be changed, but he said in fairness to the facility's teacher Lloyd Perrigo, his report says the facility achieved AYP.

Amarok questioned whether NPS students had made remarkable gains in 2010, noting that 25 students dropped out of school in 2010 and 47 students dropped out in the previous two years. "What effect does that have?" she asked. "There was a larger dropout in 2010 than in 2009."

Amarok said there is a need to be brutally honest where a school is failing and put it on the table. She quoted Lynn Fielding, a keynote speaker at the annual Assn. of Alaska School Boards meeting last November, as saying that school districts need to admit they have failed. Fielding has served as a Kennewick School District board member for 22 years. He is a tax and business attorney, co-founder of The Children's Reading Foundation and co-author of books including Annual Growth for All Students, Catch-up Growth for Those Who Are Behind (2007) and The 90% Reading Goal (1997).

Countering Amarok's remarks, board member Betsy Brennan said Wehde's report on 2010 SBA results shows wonderful achievements and the way to go. She acknowledged that some students are falling behind and dropping out, but said there are all sorts of reasons for that. "The problem is endemic in western Alaska and probably Alaska when you look at Anchorage," she said. She suggested looking at school districts in the entire state and determining what can be done to address the problem.

Brennan credited Wehde with bringing the 90 percent reading initiative to NPS. "We owe that to Jon Wehde," she said. "Strategic Plan, Jon Wehde. We need to celebrate success. The numbers are increasing...."

"This report was supposed to show increases," commented board member Barb Nickels. "We had multiple double digit increases and should be very proud."

Creating balanced classrooms The creation of balanced classrooms is among strategies the Kennewick School District uses that are considered promising for Nome Elementary School, NES Principal Dave Keller noted in his report to the board. "Based on our own teacher reports as well as a conversation I recently had with Kennewick Assistant Superintendent of Elementary Education Greg Fancher, creating balanced classrooms is essential to equity of instructional opportunity, and assures that all students experience a rich cross-cultural learning experience," Keller wrote in his report to the board.

Eighth graders to the rescue

By Jeff Erickson

The 2009 decision by the Alaska Schools Activities Association to allow schools with enrollments of less than 20 students to use eighth grade students in team sports (basketball and volleyball) was made to help teams remain viable. It probably wasn't considered a tool that would shift the balance of power in 1A conferences. However, that is what happened at the Bering Sea Conference basketball tournament in St. Michael this past weekend.

Eighth graders Renatta Olson, Alice Amaktoolik and Keisha Olanna led the #1 seeded Golovin Lynx to the championship over a plucky, and even younger, Teller Aklaq team that features three eighth graders, three freshmen and a senior. Jumping out to a 31 point lead at halftime, Golovin had to withstand a withering offensive barrage by Teller in the second half to prevail 51-44. Coach of the Year Eric Boring led the young Aklaqs to the surprise second place finish.

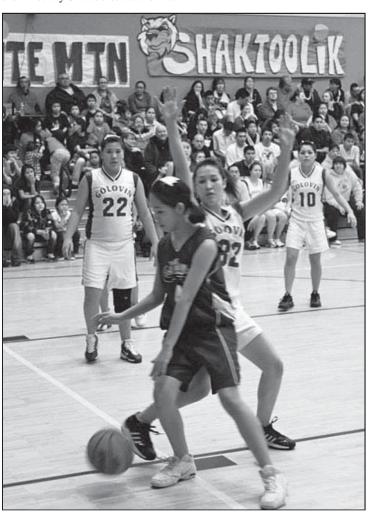

The boys' tournament featured many very competitive games but it became clear that two teams stood out and were heading for a showdown. The Elim Eagles had ruled the BSSD roost for the past three years, each time grabbing the championship and representing the district well in Anchorage. They came in with the top seed and had their eyes set on a four-peat. Golovin on the other hand came in as a dark horse. They hadn't played any of the top three seeds and a couple of mid-season forfeits hurt their record. They didn't let any of that distract them as they won their first two games early and prepared for Elim.

Elim as well ran through their first two opponents on the way to the championship game. The matchup was all that fans could have hoped for, and more. Elim asserted itself early and led by as many as 17 in the first half; big man Oscar Takak, Jr. leading the way. Golovin wouldn't give in, chipping away at the lead until late in the third quarter when they tied it up, 57-57. John Peterson imposed his will on the Elim defense with repeated attacks on the basket forcing contact and making big shots. The rest of the game was a see-saw affair with the entire gym on the edge of their seat. Fans in both communities stuffed into video conference rooms to watch the broadcast of the games. Emotions couldn't have been higher. At the end of the quarter the score was tied again and the result was an overtime period.

The key to the end result was the foul situation. With a very short bench Elim's problems became huge when Takak fouled out. Teammate Josh Jemewouk took the reins and kept the Eagles in it until he too fouled out. By the end of the overtime period Elim was down to three players on the floor and Golovin held on for a 95-88 victory, ending the Eagle run of championships.

While there were tears for the "agony of defeat" on the Elim side, there was elation on the Golovin side of the floor. Both teams left their best effort on the floor and, after the initial shock of the loss, Elim will look back on their great run with pride.

Emerson Conger places 4th in the Ski Tour of Anchorage

The Nome Ski and Biathlon Team's three seniors, as well as the coach, traveled to Anchorage on March 6 to compete in Alaska's largest annual cross-country ski event, the Tour of Anchorage, which boasted three different ways (a 25 kilometer race route, a 40K race route, and a 50 K race route) to travel across Alaska's largest city.

Using the event as a tune-up for the upcoming regional and rural state ski meets, Emerson Conger placed fourth overall (out of 522 racers, 277 in the male division) in the 25K (15.5 mile) race that began at Alaska Pacific University and finished across town at Kincaid Park. His time of 1:22:28 was 28 seconds off the overall podium, earning him a second place finish, and silver medal, in the 18-24-year-old age category.

Sam Schmidt, who has been closing the gap on his teammate for years, finished in a time of 1:28:09, placing him 14th overall. Schmidt's efforts earned him a bronze medal in the 15 -17-year-old category.

It's hard to imagine someone skiing the Tour of Anchorage for their first race, but it's even harder to fathom that person cracking the top 50. Mark Steiger, who was also skiing on groomed trails for the very first time in his life, did just that, finishing in a time of 1:41:05, and a 41st place overall finish.

Nome Ski and Biathlon head coach, Keith Conger, skiing in his second Tour, earned the gold medal in his age category. He posted a time of 1:33:28, which was good enough for a top 25 overall finish.

"I'm very proud of our ski teamers," stated coach Conger. "Other than one fella from Dillingham, we were the only rural Alaskan, off-theroad-system skiers. We were also the only skiers to not have access to groomed trails to train on."

Dylan Watts, Alaska Pacific University's master ski instructor edged a group of world-class skiers, including Olympian Southham of Anchorage, to capture the 50 K (31 mile) title.

Melissa Lewis of Fairbanks outlasted former Olympic biathlete Rachel Steer in the 50 K women's race.

The Nome Ski and Biathlon team will be traveling to White Mountain, the host of both the regional and rural state ski and biathlon meets, later this month.

AWARD (left)—The award for the team with the highest GPA in region one for boys went to the Nome Nanooks.

Nome Public Schools making progress on a long journey

By Jon Wehde NPS Superintendent

Nome Public Schools is on a long journey of improvement. We know we have far to go, but are proud of the gains we have made. The Standards Based Assessment (SBA) test results for 2010 were a marked improvement over those of 2009.

2010 SBA results

An example of the gains being made is that 4 of our 5 schools made Adequate Yearly Progress (AYP) in 2010.

- •Nome Elementary missed in 2 of its 13 scored categories.
- District only missed in the Students with Disabilities categories.
   The 2010 success is reflected in our growth over prior years. Nome-

Beltz Junior/Senior High School had some remarkable gains.

- School as a whole—9 percent more students proficient in language arts.
- School as a whole—11 percent more students proficient in math.
- Alaska Native subgroup—10 percent more students proficient in language arts.
- Alaska Native subgroup—14 percent more students proficient in math
- Economically disadvantaged subgroup—12 percent more students proficient in language arts.
- Economically disadvantaged subgroup—20 percent more students proficient in math.

Nome Elementary School did not make AYP, but there were some good gains there as well.

- Alaska Native subgroup—6 percent more students proficient in math
- Multi-ethnic subgroup—12 percent more students proficient in language arts (vs. 2008).
- Multi-ethnic subgroup—17 percent more students proficient in math (vs. 2008).
- Economically disadvantaged subgroup—2 percent more students proficient in language arts.
- Economically disadvantaged subgroup—9 percent more students proficient in math.

When looking at our cohort data:

• 6 of 7 grades showed growth in the percentage of students scoring proficient or advanced on the reading portion of the SBA.

- 5 of 7 grades showed that same growth in writing and in math.
- Other highlights for 2010:
   Reading—4th,6th and 9th grades posted the highest proficiency percentage in our test history; 7th grade tied for the highest proficiency percentage.
- Writing—7th and 9th grades posted the highest proficiency percentages in our test history in writing; 4th grade tied for the highest proficiency percentage.
- Math—7th and 9th graders had the highest proficiency percentages in our test history.

The following system adjust-

2010-2011 system adjustments

ments have been put in place to increase our rate of improvement.

- Hired an elementary school reading tutor to work with our Title I reading teacher.
- Hired a math specialist to work with our elementary students.
- Hired a curriculum and assessment coordinator to make connections between our data and what we teach.
- Completing Year 1 of imple- menting a 5 goal strategic plan.
   The school board has adopted a goal of 90 percent of all third graders reading at the third grade level by 2014. Structural changes are being put into place toward meeting that goal.

use a variety of student characteristics to balance their individual classrooms including input from previous teachers, performance on academic and district-wide assessments, inclusion of special needs learners and ESL [English as a Second Language] learners as well as ethnic characteristics," Keller wrote. "Once classrooms have been balanced, teachers are randomly assigned to those classrooms."

Keller said a newly formed group of NPS Leadership Team members and teachers who traveled to Kennewick last year has not yet decided how to create a balanced classroom.

In public comments during the board meeting, Marcy Merrill said she is a parent of two students at NES and one at the Science Academy. She cited board policy on parental involvement and said 30 to 40 percent of parents are involved in yearly requests for teachers for their children. "How basic can you get?" she said. She asked the board to support such parental involvement. "I request the teacher who best meets my child's needs," she added.

Nickels asked whether the Kennewick School District has alternatives for creating balanced classrooms. She voiced support for Merrill's request.

Nome-Beltz report

Steve Gast, Nome-Beltz High School principal noted that the boys basketball team led by Coach Patrick Callahan will compete in the Alaska State Basketball Tournament for the fourth year in a row and has won more than 20 games for their fifth straight season. (The Class C tournament begins Thursday with the Nome Nanooks facing the Monroe High School team from Fairbanks at the Sullivan Arena in Anchorage.)

Gast said three students from the Nome Youth Facility are participating in the Apex Learning digital curriculum, and Perrigo feels the program will be a great benefit to them. Students who have fallen behind credit requirements are using laptop computers provided by the school to take semester course offerings during the last two periods of the school day in the Apex program. Each course involves 70 to 90 hours of interactive direct instruction, guided practice, and integrated formative, summative and diagnostic assessment

In response to a question from Amarok, Gast said the Apex program is a slow go now because students are learning it and so is the teacher. The accomplishment level was first set at 80 percent before a student was allowed to move on, but it has been set lower because students found the 80 percent level hard to achieve, he added. Gast said the goal is for students to get the credit and still learn.

Amarok asked Gast if a seven-period day is planned for next year. "Yes that's in," Gast replied. He said English, social studies, science and math teachers will mentor students who need tutoring in a study hall.

Board President Gloria Karmun asked Gast about the turnout for the career fair held in February. "Good, the kids loved it," Gast said. "There were some weather issues. Those who came were engaging and engaged in." He asked Nivvy Brandt for her thoughts about the career fair.

"I enjoyed it, but there were so many things and people, I was burned out at end of the day," Brandt said. "It engaged students who would not normally be engaged."

February students of month

Vice Principal Carmen Russo introduced eighth grader Zoe Allyson Mason as the Nome-Beltz Junior High School student of the month for February. Her mother is Laura Hauff. Josh Vaughn, social studies and art teacher said he recommended Mason for her hard work, participation and leadership. She has a 4.0 grade average and serves as student council treasurer, he added. "A lot of Junior High students look up to her on the basketball court, volleyball team and in the classroom." Vaughn said. "She is dependable and strives for the best. She won't be here next year, unfortunately."

Russo announced that Jacob Martin, a junior who likes to hunt ducks with his cousins and fish with his mom and aunts, was selected as Nome-Beltz High School's student of the month for February. His parents are Guy and Blue Martin. Russo said Martin, who was not present at the meeting, works hard and is a member of the wrestling team. This year he joined Native Youth Olympics and is looking forward to competing in the high kick in April, she added. Russo said Martin was selected as one of seven students to travel to Provideniya, Russia. He plans to pursue a degree in engineering.

Erika Rhodes, U.S. History and Spanish teacher said she nominated Martin "because he is extra kind and friendly to his peers. I've had him three years in Spanish and now also in my U.S. history class. He rarely misses school and works hard." Rhodes said Martin is funny, creative, and there is noting mundane about his work.

Snow day make-up

The board approved Wehde's recommendation to convert a teachers' inservice day originally scheduled for Thursday, April 21 to a regular school day to make up for the most recent snow day—a school closure due to weather conditions.

Upcoming events

The spring book fair will be held in the NES library from 8:30 to 3:00 March 21-25. Parent-teacher conferences are slated March 25-26.

The school board has scheduled a work session on March 22 at 5:30 and a regular meeting April 5 at 5:30 in the NES library.

NPS will conduct Standards Based Assessment tests April 5-7. Nickels said volunteers are needed to serve a breakfast of fruit and cereal to students on test days and to wash fruit in preparation for the breakfast on April 4 at 5 p.m. Providing students with breakfasts helped boost NPS scores in the 2010 SBA tests, she added.

Finalists announced for superintendent

The Nome Board of Education is pleased to announce that three individuals have been selected as finalists in the search for a new superintendent beginning with the 2011-12 school year.

The Board elected to conduct a nationwide search and contracted with the Association of Alaska School Boards to facilitate the process. The position was advertised beginning in January and closed on March 8, 2011.

Loyer claims Nome-Golovin win

Rough trail takes its toll on racers

By Tyler Rhodes

Despite a gorgeous sunny day March 12, racers in the 2011 Nome-Golovin Snowmachine Race faced a course that was anything but pretty.

Sculpted by winds that rocked the Seward Peninsula during late-February storms, the trail between Nome and Golovin featured long sections of hard wind-drifts on land and rough ice on Golovin Bay. Finding the right mix between pouring on the speed and easing back on the throttle, 25-year-old Aaron Loyer survived the ride on his Polaris Rush Pro R 600 with the fastest time of the day to take the 2011 title. Loyer, who is from Palmer, clocked a time of two hours, 17 minutes and 26 seconds.

Loyer topped the B Class racers, which was made up of riders almost exclusively riding 600cc machines. In the A Class standings, which draws the boys on bigger machines, Nome racer Jarvis Miller was top dog, clocking a time 2:20:01. Miller, fiddling an Arctic Cat Firecat F7, was only 17 seconds ahead of Nome snowmachine racing legend Evan Booth on his Polaris XL 800. Miller and Booth clocked the second and third fastest time of all racers for the day. Nome's Tre West nabbed the runner-up honors in the B Class with a time of 2:22:45 on his Arctic Cat 600R.

Kotzebue racers on Arctic Cats went one and two in the C Class race for fan-cooled machines. Dickie Moto Jr. easily took the win at 2:44:07, followed by Quinn Schaeffer at 3:06:01. The rest of the six-racer field in the fan-cooled class ended up scratching.

In the women's race, which runs to the Safety/Solomon area before turning back toward Nome, Elim's Marlene Saccheus on a Polaris IQ Shift 600 took top honors at 1:04:10, beating Nome's Mercie McGuffey by four minutes. McGuffey also saddled a Polaris 600 for the race.

New to the race this year was a junior class. Only two young racers toed the line, both from Kotzebue. Gabe Schaeffer on a SkiDoo 550 raced to the win in 57:44. Henry Richards was only a few minutes back on his Arctic Cat Z 440, making the junior class the only group to finish without a scratch. The junior class also raced on a shortened course.

This year's race saw a couple of serious accidents, one involving a spectator and racer. A collision near the race's start in the vicinity of the Nome River injured both racer Stacey Green and spectator Jessa Jennetten who was also on a snowmachine.

The most serious injury in the race appears to have befallen Nome racer Joe Fullwood. Fullwood had to be flown off the course after breaking his femur in a high-speed crash near the top of Cape Nome. Race winner Loyer described Fullwood as cartwheeling through the air. "He caught a wind drift really bad and went flipping through the air," Loyer said on KNOM Radio. "I hope he's alright. He was moving." Fullwood was on the return portion of the race.

The rough trail conditions this year required the start be moved farther east to keep racers from having to deal with a tall wall of sea ice that was pushed on to the shore near Nome as a result of the February storms. Once past the Nome River, the racecourse takes an inland route for much of the competition. Even with the problematic ice taken out of the mix, Loyer told KNOM Radio that the course remained plenty challenging. "The trail, it's pretty brutal," he said at the race's finish. "I'm just exhausted. I rode as hard as I could the whole way. My arms are pumped out. I can't feel my fingers anymore. It's brutal when you're going that hard the whole way."

able lead, as Hugh Neff, Ramey Smyth, Sebastian Schnuelle and Hans Gatt were all within striking distance and this gave fodder for speculations.

Into Unalakleet

While those five mushers battled to stay awake on the long 90-mile trail between Kaltag and Unalakleet, the coastal village of 800 swelled with Iditarod visitors. Media crews, fans and musher family members piled out of their chartered planes and into the Unalakleet pizza restaurant "Peace on Earth." Lance Mackev's mother was there, as was Mitch Seavey waiting for his son Dallas and Dan Kaduce looking to meet up with his partner Jodi Bailey, who is trying to become the first rookie musher to finish both the Yukon Quest and the Iditarod in the same year.

In the restaurant, talk dominated the fact that there are a bunch of mushers poised to make their move to win this race. Usually, by the time the mushers reach the coast, the race is on between two contenders. But there is nothing usual about this year's race. The weather had been warm, not conducive to teams like Baker's that are known to thrive in cold, windy conditions. Trail conditions, Baker said, were challenging on the Yukon. He said there was no bottom to the trail and that he could hear an echo from the snow as air pockets in newly put-in trails have a particular hollow sound. "Coming off the Yukon, I noticed immediately that the trail got better," said Baker. But he had to fight to stay awake. Baker said there were little problems he encountered during the run, starting with him falling asleep, waking up with the team stopped and also once falling off the sled. But being tired at this point, he said, is to be expected.

Despite being exhausted, Baker went about his checkpoint routine efficiently. He immediately took the booties off the dog's feet, and then he went to fetch hot water from a heated water tank to prepare the dog's food. As the dog food was soaking, he opened a bag of straw and bedded down the dogs. Three race veterinarians checked Baker's dogs for hydration and listened to their hearts and lungs. They gave all 11 dogs a clean bill of health to keep going. When Baker started feeding his animals, they devoured their meal with gusto. They also ate the second helping and gobbled down chunks of meat for dessert. Baker said that he feeds them bigger meals on the trail, as there are fewer distractions for them than in the checkpoints. As soon as they were done eating, they laid down to sleep despite the crowd surrounding their beds of straw.

Baker went inside the checkpoint to have breakfast cooked by Unalakleet mayor William "Middi" Johnson. Baker talked for a while with Mitch Seavey and visiting musher Aaron Burmeister before catching an hour of sleep himself.

Seavey had been in the race as well, but was withdrawn when he almost cut his right index finger off while opening a bale of straw in Ophir. Seavey had to be flown to a specialist in Anchorage to re-attach the partially cut-off finger. Looking at the teams coming into Unalakleet, he said that both Baker's and Ramey Smyth's teams looked in great shape. Smyth came in two hours and 23 minutes after Baker. He moved swiftly about his checkpoint routine, massaged a few dog's wrists and then covered his team with blankets for a good rest. As the sun rose on Sunday morning, Hans Gatt came in followed Schnuelle, Hugh Neff and Ray Red-

By the time Hugh Neff fed his dogs a nice helping of human grade chicken snacks, Baker awakened his dogs, fed them, bootied them up and gave one more TV interview before gee-hawing them out onto the icy slough out of Unalakleet. The dogs got up and willingly left the checkpoint. Smyth gave his dogs a fivehour rest in Unalakleet- an hour longer than Baker — and from there on slowly but surely whittled down on Baker's lead. By the time both Baker and Smyth made it to White Mountain on Monday afternoon, Baker had only a 51 minute lead over Smyth. There, the two teams were taking their mandatory eight-hour rest before battling it out on the last 88 miles to Nome.

Further down the trail, Baker's cousin Robert Nelson battled a painful injury. While getting ready to leave Kaltag on Sunday noon, Nelson said he had dislocated his shouland that he had to run six hours with excruciating pain until he got to Kaltag, where a veterinarian popped his shoulder back into place. Nelson said he felt much better, but was still sore from the ordeal.

A new record

In Elim, race judge Jake Berkowitz said on Monday that the race is poised to shatter Martin Buser's record time of 8 days, 22 hours and 46 minutes. "Unless weather moves in or one of them totally falls apart, this is going to be a record setting finish," Berkowitz.

On the trail from Elim to Golovin, Baker helped his team move along, ski-poling and kicking the sled forward. In Nome, race officials got ready to welcome the winner to town. The finish chute was prepared with snow at the end of Front Street. The burled arch was moved into place. The Iditarod 2011 finish sign was strung across the street and finally the flags representing musher's mained uncharacteristically limp on this sunny Monday afternoon. Nome was ready for the 2011 Iditarod trail champion.

Born and raised in Nome, Blandford most recently served as the special projects coordinator for Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation, one of the six entities represented by WACDA. After graduating from Nome-Beltz High School, Blandford earned a bachelor's degree in Business Management from the University of Alaska Anchorage. She was awarded her master's degree in Business Administration from UAA in 2008. In addition to working for NSEDC, Blandford has held administrative positions with the State of Alaska and a private law firm.

"We are thrilled to welcome Aggie Blandford as WACDA's new executive director," stated Larry Cotter, chairman of the WACDA Board of Directors and CEO of the Aleutian Pribilof Island Community Development Association.

"NSEDC's loss is WACDA's gain. Aggie's experience with the CDQ program and familiarity with fisheries issues are an asset to WACDA. We are excited to have an executive director from one of the CDQ program's 65 member communities and a candidate that has had the chance to work for such a fine organization as NSEDC," Cotter continued.

While red king crab has long been a mainstay of the multi-course meal traditionally presented to the first musher to reach the Yukon River,all mushers and fans alike will be able to enjoy the delicacy this year in Nome without having to be the frontrunner of one of world's toughest races to get it.

NSEDC is supplying up to 1,000 pounds of Norton Sound red king crab and halibut for the banquet to be held at the Nome Recreation Center March 20. The crab and halibut were all landed by area resident fishermen and are some of the finest seafood on the planet. For those wanting to get a taste of the crab and halibut outside of the banquet, Norton Sound Seafood Products offers the fish locally at its plant in Nome.

As in past years, the preparation of the dinner will be under the direction of the talented and expert chefs from Anchorage's Millennium Hotel.

KICY-AM receives prestigious NRB

milestone award

Manassas, VA – KICY-AM received the prestigious NRB Milestone Award during the March 1st Banquet at the NRB Convention & Exposition.

"Just a year after Alaska become admitted into the Union, forwardthinking pastors founded KICY in the regional hub of Nome," said NRB President and CEO Dr. Frank Wright. "More than five decades later, KICY's signal still reaches Alaska and the Russian Far East with the life-giving words of the Gospel."

On Easter Sunday, April 17, 1960, KICY AM-850 signed on with the words, "Faith comes by hearing. And hearing by the Word of God." This fulfilled the dream of connecting the many villages of arctic, western Alaska with a radio station. Today, KICY is a commercial, Clear-Channel 50,000 watt facility with the only international license ever granted by the FCC, which provides KICY and the Covenant Church an amazingly powerful tool to share the Gospel with our Russian brothers and sisters. And they, in turn, have responded with great joy and appreciation.

Longevity in any field is becoming a rarity, and exemplary service in Christian broadcasting for 50 years—or more—is a feat worthy of recognition and applause. With the Milestone Award, NRB desires to honor the industry pioneers who brought Christian communications to the place of respect and achievement it enjoys today.

ACCEPTING AWARD— KICY Station Manager Dennis Weidler with NRB Milestone award.

Running the Race By Pastor Karen Sonray, Our Savior Lutheran church for the Nome Ministerial Association

"You're only as good as the dogs that lead you." That's the saying stuck in my head. A good friend of mine, who is both a musher and a pastor, repeats it often. During this time of the Iditarod I find myself reflecting on his quip. No matter how hard you work, no matter how talented you may be as a musher, you cannot win the race without good dogs pulling you. The lead dog is crucial. But then so is the wheel dog. Each member of the team plays an important role. And, let's face it, the team needs the musher to push them toward the goal, too.

Jesus liked to teach with parables. He used everyday common activities to evoke rich lessons and meaning. Perhaps there's a parable in the dog team metaphor for us as individuals, families and communities. First of all, we need each other. And, given that reality, we should take seriously the differentiated roles we each play. There is dignity in each part of the team. This is easily discounted or forgotten in our specialized world and in a world that idolizes celebrities. Secondly, we can encourage one another. An elder I knew used to say, "I don't have to put you down in order to put myself up." I like that.

Where are you being pulled or pushed? Do you have the right lead dog? Are you being pushed toward the right goal? During this season before Easter, many Christians are taking the time to assess their own personal "race" of life. The 40-days of "Lent" are meant to be a time to re-examine priorities and values. Are there areas where I need to take a different direction or even turn around? "Repent" comes from the Greek word "metanoia" which literally means "turn around."

As you run the race of life, keep in mind the one who created you is also with you in that race. Carve out time to listen to God's voice in your life. As Christians we believe our maker sent his son into history so that we will never be alone whether we fail or win in whatever endeavor we find ourselves. Christians believe ultimately our reason for existence on this planet is to establish a relationship to the person who placed us here. Until then, all quests for happiness fall short. Recognition, money, power, the perfect marriage or friendship – all fall short and never quite satisfy our deepest longings nor fill our restless spirit. The good news is the one who alone can satisfy is there even now behind, beside and before us. St. Paul says it best:

"Therefore since we are surrounded by so great a cloud of witnesses, let us also lay aside every weight and the sin that clings so closely, and let us run with perseverance the race that is set before us, looking to Jesus the pioneer and perfected of our faith." Hebrews 12: 1

Cell phone use affects the brain

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Cell phones have changed the way we communicate. According to a recent study, they may also be changing our brains.

The electrical signal from a cell phone antenna causes subtle changes in brain metabolism, according to research published last month in the Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA). The clinical significance of these findings remains

Investigators used a special imaging machine called a positron emission tomography (PET) scanner to document the effects a cell phone has on the human brain. The PET scans show a change in glucose metabolism in the area of the brain closest to where the cell phone makes contact with the head.

Whether or not these changes in brain metabolism are harmful is unclear, according to the lead study author, Nora Volkow, MD of the National Institute of Health.

Research regarding the risk of cell phone use on the brain, especially the risk of brain cancer, is conflicting. Some studies show a small risk. Other studies show no risk at all. The largest study to date, published in May 2010 in the International Journal of Epidemiology found that cell phone users have no increased risk for glioma or meningioma, two of the most common forms of brain

The harmful effects of any electromagnetic radiation diminish with distance from the antenna. Most experts agree that the electromagnetic field produced by a cell phone is harmless beyond 12 inches

It is also important to note that in the recent study, changes in brain metabolism occurred only after 50 minutes of exposure to a cell phone in the "on" position. This suggests that prolonged exposure to electromagnetic radiation from a cell phone is required to elicit any effect on the brain.

Whether or not the research should serve as a note of caution is a matter of perspective. At this point, experts only know that the electromagnetic signals from a cell phone affect the brain in some way. Encouragingly, these effects do not appear to cause cancer. Perhaps one day, use of this technology will prove clinically beneficial.

The finding that brain metabolism can be affected by radio waves has profound implications for future forms of medical treatment. Imagine an application for your smart phone that treats migraine headaches simply by holding the phone over the painful area of the head.

Until research further clarifies the risks and benefits of cell phone use on brain chemistry, Dr. Volkow and others recommend using the speakerphone or other hands-free option when using a cell phone. This may be especially important for young children and teenagers whose brains are still in development.

Make your home safe from carbon monoxide, the silent killer

By Jim Gorman

Jim Gorman serves as vice president and general manager for Allied Barton Security Services, www.alliedbarton.com.

Being proactive in making sure your home is safe from carbon monoxide (CO) poisoning is the first step in keeping you and your family

While CO detectors work well, they should not be your only reliable source of preventing this odorless, colorless and tasteless gas from entering your home. Each year, more than 15,000 people report to the Emergency Department with symptoms of CO poisoning and a staggering average of 500 lives are taken yearly because of accidental intake of this silent killer. Keep you and your family safe by following these tips to prevent against CO poisoning in your home.

Gorman's tips include:

- · There are many common household appliances and chemicals that have the potential to give off CO gases. While CO in small doses usually is not harmful, you should be aware of which appliances and chemicals can produce the gas. Items include, but are not limited to:
- 1. Gas water heaters, ovens and stoves
- 2.Charcoal grills
- 3. Cigarette smoke
- 4. Spray paint, solvents, degreasers and paint removers
- CO is most commonly formed when organic compounds burn. The most common sources for organic compounds to burn are in vehicle exhaust, smoke from fires and nonelectric heaters. Be cautious if you are around any of these sources for an extended period of time.
- A CO detector should be on each level of your home, placed near bedrooms so sleeping children and adults will awaken when an alarm sounds if CO is present. Detectors should be checked monthly to make sure they are properly working.

• As a home owner or renter, you should always inspect your home for hazards that could easily cause CO poisoning such as a clogged chimney, inadequate ventilation of your furnace, gas oven and range, and blocked exhaust flues or ducts. If any questionable hazards are found, contact a trained professional to clear the area. Have your furnace serviced

- · Idling your vehicle in a garage, even if the garage door is open, is very dangerous because CO fumes can fill up a small garage space very fast and leak into the rest of your home if the garage is connected. Only idle your vehicle outside.
- · A gas oven is not meant for heating your house. Make sure you are properly using your household appliances because not only could CO gases become present, but also fires could easily be started.
- Evacuate the building immediately if CO is detected.
- If CO gases are present in your home, it is important for the source of the gas to be found. Contact your local fire department or public safety company, as they will be able to find the source for you after you evacu-

Treatment is very important if you or anyone you know is showing signs and symptoms of CO poison-

The signs and symptoms of CO poisoning include, but are not limited to headaches, nausea, fatigue, chest pain, impaired judgment, confusion, abdominal pain and fainting.

If someone is showing any of these signs or symptoms, first move them outside to fresh air and then seek medical attention immediately. Humans are not the only ones who can be affected by CO poisoning. Pets will also show similar signs to CO poisoning and will also need treated immediately.

According to the National Fire Protection Association, 93 percent of homes have smoke detectors but the Consumer Product Safety Commission estimates only 15 percent have a CO detector. It is important to have a detector in your home to alert you when the gas is present but taking the precautionary steps to prevent CO poisoning is key to you and your family's safety.

Frank E. Ahnangnatoguk

Frank Eilghuk Ahnangnatoguk was born August 5, 1923 in Ikpik, Alaska to John and Lena Ahnangnatoguk. Frank was born into a large family, with 13 sisters and brothers. Frank and his brothers and sisters grew up in Shishmaref, Ikpik, and Brevig Mission.

When Frank was a young man, it was love at first sight for him when he first laid eyes on his future bride, Edna Eyuk, at the Reindeer Plant near Teller and Brevig Mission. For about a year Frank and Edna got to know one another by writing to each other through the mail. On November 27, 1950 Frank and Edna were joined in marriage and began a life full of love and family together in Nome.

Frank was known to be a hard worker that always completed the job with competence and efficiency. Frank never did anything halfway, and made sure his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren learned to excel in whatever they did. Among Frank's career and activities was having been recruited and proudly serving in the Alaska Territorial Guard from 1942 through

1944. Frank then made his career operating heavy machinery for Hammond's Gold Mining at Sunset Creek, Coffee Creek, Lost River and in Teller, Munz Northern Airlines, B&R Tug and Barge, and the Department of Transportation for the State of Alaska and also working for Lomen's and Billman's in Nome. Once he retired, Frank was always busy making ulus, carving ivory necklaces and earrings, collecting coins, carrying out traditional subsistence activities throughout the year and teaching the younger generations how to go hunting, fishing, camping and reading the weather. As they grew older, Frank made sure his brothers and sisters had enough Eskimo food to eat and always shared what he and his crew caught or gathered.

Frank and Edna welcomed four children into their lives: James Ahnangnatoguk, Alma Smithhisler, Ronald Ahnangnatoguk and Florence McComas. When their first grandchild, John Ahnangantoguk, was born they welcomed him into their family and raised him as one of their own children. While John was growing up he couldn't say "grandpa" or "grandma" and began calling Frank and Edna, "Papa" and "Gaga". The names stuck and they have been known by those terms of endearment ever since. When Frank "Little Papa" was born, Papa found a new best friend. Little Papa was the apple of Papa's eye and under Papa's supervision he could never get into trouble

Family was important to Papa and he made sure his siblings, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren were taken care of. Papa made sure everyone was included when going to camp whether at Fort Davis, Teller, Tukshuq or near Igloo. Papa loved fixing up camp and taught his grandchildren how to build the seawall at Tukshuq so when the river rose it would not damage the house.

Papa will be known and remembered for his mischievous sense of humor and silliness and making people laugh. Even when he was sick in the hospital, he still managed to remember his humor and would make funny faces at the nurses and joke around with them.

Papa read the Bible and prayed every day and would teach his family to love the Lord. Papa also taught the children in the family to have faith in God because we would one day meet again in Heaven.

Frank went to be with his Heavenly Father on Friday, February 25, 2011. He went to meet in Heaven his parents John and Lena Ahnangnatoguk, parents-in-law James and Eva Eyuk, siblings Walter Ahnangnatoguk, Dorcas Rock, Victor Weakak, Margaret Picnalook, Andrew Ahnangnatoguk, Ira Ahnangnatoguk, Donna Kline, George Ahnangnatoguk, and Agnes Ahnangnatoguk, son James Ahnangnatoguk and son-in-law Donald Smithhisler.

He is survived by his beloved wife of 60 years Edna Ahnangnatoguk, children, Alma Smithhisler, Ronald (Sarah) Ahnangnatoguk and Florence (Albert) McComas, grandchildren John (Marilyn) Ahnangnatoguk, Gail Smithhisler, Thomas and Joshua McComas, Donny, Tracy, Steven and Allen Ahnangnatoguk, great-grandchildren Frank "Little Papa," Piniaq and Nutasaq Ahnangnatoguk and siblings Della Walluk, Allen Ahnangnatoguk, Mary Sallee and Agnes Pagel.

Cora Atqaquq Senungetuk Olson

Cora Atqaquq Senungetuk Olson, loving wife, mother, grandmother and sister, died on early in the morning March 10. Cora was born on April 4, 1942 in Wales. She was known to many as Grammy and was well known for her friendliness and kindness to everybody. Cora's quick wit and sense of humor made it easy for her to make new friends and make people laugh.

In 1971, Cora moved to Seward for training where she met Larry Olson and on June 29, 1973, they were happily married. Larry and Cora made their home in Seward and later moved to Nome to be closer to Cora's parents, Willie and Helen Senungetuk. They lived in Nome from 1982 – 1991, and Cora worked at the Bering Sea Women's Shelter. She enjoyed helping and comforting women and children.

She enjoyed attending church at Alaska Native Medical Center, cultural activities at the Native Heritage Center, and Singspiration. She truly loved to see family and friends, sharing good memories and always laughing. The joy of her life was her grandchildren. She liked sewing and beading, and often shared her beautiful Eskimo angels with others.

Cora is survived by her husband Larry Olson, daughters Charlotte Miller and partner Jeff Newbauer; Leah Senungetuk Warburton and husband Gunny, all of Fairbanks; her baby girl Laura Olson, loving son Eric "Son" Olson, most loved grandchildren, her rainbow Andrew "Jake" Miller, her sunshine Jenny Miller, and beautiful and she's ours Carlee Elizabeth Olson, her brothers Ron Senungetuk and wife Turid of Homer; Joseph Senungetuk; Nancy Felton and her husband Willard and

•The status of right of way on the curve between the new hospital and N St. has been established with plats filed with several adjoining parcels of Alaska Gold property.

• Conveyance of title of the road to the City involves a deed that would protect the State from environmental issues, safety issues and federal funding obligation that are unlikely for the City to accept.

Chairman Tom Sparks asked if the City would have to take ownership before dealing with issues of speed and signage. Commissioners stated there would be problems with more vehicles and more foot traffic on the road. They noted the potential area where there are likely to be blind spots. They wondered if the city should purchase more land on the north side of the road to allow for a footpath on the north side of the road.

Commissioner Charlie Weiss discussed a 4-way stop coming out of the new hospital driveway and Sparks said we would not want to have an unlimited number of driveways along the road.

The Commission considered the Nome Justice Center and State Office Building concept as proposed by Sitnasuak Native Corporation an the City of Nome. The plan is NOT to utilize the 6th Ave. subdivision.

The City and Sitnasuak propose to work together to provide a 20-year government-to-government lease. The size of the building will be smaller than the original proposal. It will not include the DOT, which will keep its office space at the Nome-Beltz facility.

The proposal is to build on Front Street on the Sitnasuak lot across the street from the Board of Trade. The proposal is to purchase and remove the Old Pharmacy Building and Mark's Soap and Suds. Commissioner Gerald Brown stated there was no reason to have a sky bridge over Lane's Way. As to the concerns that half of the lot would be in the 100-year flood plain Brown said if it was raised five ft. it would be out of the flood plain.

The commission also considered the need for cemetery expansion and commented about areas the city needs to consider for land purchase and expansion. They talked of expansion to the Camp 5 area, north of the Public Safety Building and asked where the city might want to purchase land for subdivision. The area east of the Bypass road was considered too bad for development because it is wetlands. They will take up the recommendations for subdiviyear's team," Baker said. "But I've always said I didn't want to race against this dog team."

Baker had kept the lead ever since leaving Eagle Island on the Yukon, but had a pack of hungry mushers vying for first place snapping at his heels. From Unalakleet on, the race was between Smyth and Baker.

"I didn't figure I had the race for sure, I didn't allow myself to think like this," said Baker. "I knew I had to take care of my own business, take care of my dogs, [...], be fair with them, not asking too much of them and if I could do that I would be alright."

Baker said that he was fortunate that he got to stick to his plan in resting the dogs exactly how he had planned while he saw Ramey Smyth continuously breaking the rest. "I was curious how strong his team actually is and how long he continues to do that," said Baker.

However, Baker also offered some self-criticism when he said that he is not very good at mastering the first part of the race that takes teams out of Willow, through forests and challenging terrain. "I am not very good at this, I don't control the sled very good," Baker said. "I need to make a lot of changes if I'm to continue to do this because I'm really weak in that area. It's not the type of mushing I enjoy, I guess. The sled is banging into the trees and I got too much stuff in the sled and the dogs are traveling too slow." But once Baker reached Nikolai, he was literally out of the woods and felt more at ease.

Now back in northwest Alaska, Baker said that he can't wait to get back home to Kotzebue to share this life-changing experience with his family, friends and supporters.

As Baker, the dog team and the entire entourage emptied the chute, the Nome sirens sounded again to mark the arrival of Ramey Smyth. Escorted by a Nome police car, Smyth ran in front of his team up Front Street, arriving 64 minutes after Baker in second place. Hans Gatt was the third to make it into Nome on Tuesday morning.

RED LANTERN— The Widow's Lantern goes to Ellen Halverson, the last musher to come off the trail. Halverson has won the Red Lantern twice.

Storm brings race to a stormy finish

The 2011 Iditarod was a fast one, not only because champion John Baker set the fastest winning time ever, but the last musher also made it into town in time for a shower and a quick nap before the traditional Sunday night musher's banquet at the Nome Rec Center. By Monday morning, the finishers' chute at the end of Front Street was taken down, the burled arch is back in its usual place between City Hall and the Arctic Trading Post, and life is back to normal.

Most of the 47 finishing mushers were able to get off the trail while the sun was still shining, but the last few dog drivers experienced the beauty of a Nome blizzard. Making their way through flying snow and deep snowdrifts, Heather Siirtola of Talkeetna beat Ellen Halverson of Wasilla to the finish line by 19 minutes. On Sunday, March 20 at 10:45 a.m. Iditarod 39 was officially over.

a.m. Iditarod 39 was officially over.
U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski was there to hand over the widow's lamp to Halverson, who surrounded by media and a crowd of 100 people, turned the flame off. Just as Kotzebue musher John Baker made history at the winning end of the race, Halverson of Wasilla etched her name into the history books by being the only musher with the distinction of "winning" the Red Lantern award twice. In 2007 – the only other time that Halverson finished the Iditarod – she also came across the finish line last. In the last few feet approaching the burled arch, her sled ran over one of her wheel-dogs who spooked, got tangled and was dragged across the finish-line rear-end-first.

Fifteen out of the starting 62 mushers didn't make it to Nome for various reasons. Nome musher Melissa Owens scratched in Rainy Pass. Five rookies never made it to Nome and neither did well-known mushers like Paul Gebhard, who won the Kuskokwim 300 this year, Mitch Seavey, Gerry Willomitzer, and Robert Bundtzen. Race marshal Mark Nordman said he was surprised by the many scratches as this year dished out perfect weather from the start in Willow to most of the finish in Nome. But exactly this, Nordman said, may have worked to the detriment of those teams. "A lot of it was that the trail was so good," Nordman said. "They were going over it too fast, you really had to stand on the track and slow down your team." Mushers also got beat up

EPA sets up to monitor Nome radiation

While Japan is still struggling to control the nuclear power plant Fukushima Dai-ichi from overheating, federal and state officials in Alaska are monitoring radiation levels in five locations. So far, no alarming levels of radiation were detected ing levels of radiation were detected.

On Friday, technicians with the Environmental Protection Agency flew into Nome to assemble and calibrate a portable radiation monitor that is part of the EPA's "RadNet" system, which examines air for radiation contamination.

The monitor was set up at the new Nome Public Safety building on the Nome Bypass Road. Other monitors were deployed to Unalaska and an extra one to Juneau. Anchorage, Fairbanks and Juneau already had radiation monitors in place.

Letters -

The Census bureau just released its 2010 statistics for Alaska, the Bering Straits Native corporation and our legislative house and senate districts. The count for the city of Nome is 3,598 people, which is pretty respectable considering all the talk about high food and gas prices. Someone must like it here.

The part that I found hard to believe out of those 36 hundred people in the city of Nome, is that only 411 claimed to belong to two or more races. It used to be one of my kids' pet peeves that the census didn't have a category for people claiming more than one heritage when they were growing up. In the year 2000 they corrected it and added the new box. That box is still rather hidden and not used very much, but I think it would make us a much more homogeneous society if we found that box and used it more; Not Just in Nome, or even Alaska, but in the wholecountry. http://live.laborstats.al aska.gov/cen/ Sincerely,

Nome, AK 99762

We are all part of the system. Nome is not isolated. What happens in Japan impacts us. We know how horrible it must be to have one's home leveled by an earthquake, and family washed away by a tsunami. It happened in Alaska and we remember the pain. However, the nuclear power plant disaster on top of the other events is one of the worst tragedies in modern times. It is in times of national and global danger we look to our government for protection and information.

We want to know if a tsunami or cloud of radiation is heading our way. We want to know what to do to seek protection. In Nome last week we lost the signal for NPR. National Public Radio was broadcasting detailed news and analysis on the minute details of the situation in Japan. The signal went silent due to a transmission problem in Fairbanks. Sure we have other radio stations—they were broadcasting Christian music to save our souls, put us to sleep, make us dance or tell us the weather. To make matters worse we had to listen to some Tea Party congressman braying about killing funds to Public Radio because he did not like Click and Clack's Car Talk show. We also have to listen to those same politicians try to get rid of regulations that protect us from environmental disasters. How comfortable are we with the knowledge that in the near future China will have over one third or the world's nuclear reactors? Do we trust China to regulate the construction of reactors built by the best network of bribery and kickbacks

Do we want our government to be as deregulated as China? Do we think we need safety regulations for the protection of our future? Are we willing to insist those flying monkeys in Congress stop tearing apart our protection system and provide the good government that we deserve? We can't sacrifice the future health of America to the greed of big business shareholders and Wall Street bankers. We need to be smart and act wisely to safeguard our environment and promote a healthy nation. We are all connected. We share a very lovely and delicate planet. - N.L.M.-

Dear Nancy,

Thank you for this opportunity to correct something in last week's Nome Nugget. The title under a picture in last week's paper gives a conclusion that is incorrect. It stated Jessa (Jennetten) collided with Stacey Greene. The inference that subtitle gives is not correct.

Jessa Jennetten did not "collide" with a racer as your picture subtitle depicts. She was accidentally hit by a racer, which was neither one's fault.

Jessa, Joe and Jackson (four-yearold son) went to enjoy the Nome Golovin Snowmachine race as spectators. Joe and Jackson were in a pickup and Jessa was on a snowmachine. They were part of a lineup of pickups and snowmachines moving down the road, trying to get parked to watch the race. Three vehicles in front of Joe were waved across the trail the racers were traveling on, crossing the road—by a spectator. I am sure everyone thought this person was a race official waving traffic across at this trail crossing. When it was Joe's turn to cross (with Jessa right behind him on the snow machine), he was waved across by the person directing traffic. As this person had successfully waved three cars in front of him across, Joe had to trust this lady to wave him across and keep the vehicle/snowmachine lineup moving. As Joe went onto the trail, another Lion's club member obviously seeing the wrong call by the person directing traffic-jumped in giving conflicting signals to stop, then go, and then stop. Joe hesitated as he now had two people giving conflicting signals, and was trying to ascertain...who was in charge here... but proceeded on.

In the meantime Stacey was doing what he does best and was accelerating up the trail towards the crossing, quite certainly assuming the trail was clear. Stacey saw the truck on the road/ trail and swerved behind the truck, only to collide (at approx 90 MPH) T-bone fashion with Jessa on snowmachine (behind the truck)—on the roadway. Stacey had no way of seeing Jessa and Jessa had no way of seeing Stacey (due to parked vehicles with only a 10-12 foot trail between them, and spectators crowding the trail). As you can see, this was a very unfortunate accident that only by the grace of God both Stacey and Jessa were able to limp away from (one in an ambulance and both later on crutches). So to state that Jessa collided with Stacey gives the inference that she errantly got in the way of and ran into Stacey. That is very incorrect.

Both parties have been trying to heal after this horrific accident.

Videos have been viewed and confirmed. There has been a lot of reaching out by both parties and also by the Lions Club. Neither party wishes to have the race ended, but changes must be made. There must be flaggers at each crossing of the roadway - official, responsible, flaggers to protect both the public and the racers. Perhaps there might need to be Troopers where the spectators and vehicles are - such as at the raft race. The Troopers had a great presence at this race, but were mostly tasked with picking up race crash victims. It seems the most danger to the public is at the start where the race path crosses the traveled roadway. This is where the spectators have to rely on the race officials to conduct a safe race. There was obviously a great breakdown in this protection at this

Jessa, Joe and Jackson did not go out on this bright sunny day to foil Stacey's race...or end up mortally in-They went out like every other family in Nome did to enjoy the day, the race and each other as a family... and watch the race. How disastrous could it be to be nearly killed while on this family outing? Clearly, if it wouldn't have been Jessa who was hit, it would have been the next crossing vehicle in

We understand that the Lion's club is making positive steps to correct unsafe issues of the race to the public and the racers. We applaud their accountability and efforts to make sure something of this sort does not happen again.

We would appreciate it greatly if The Nome Nugget would correct the subtitle under the picture on Page 9 of last week's Nugget. Thank you for your time and attention to this. Sincerely, Doug and Judy Martinson

Dear Editor,

Congratulations to John Baker on this year's Iditarod Win!

I'd like to laud this year's Iditarod winner, John Baker, for making history on his gold medal and finishing the race in record time. Baker and his team of record-setting huskies claimed victory in the 39th Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race yesterday in Nome giving Kotzebue bragging rights and made this a thrilling race for Alaskans and people across the His win ends Lance Mackey's string of four victories and secures the first win by a Northwestern Alaska musher in the 1,000-mile race across Alaska.

crossed the finish line in Nome at 9:46 am on Tuesday, March 15th. He completed this race in 8 days, 18 hours and 46 minutes, beating the previous record by three hours.

An Inupiaq of Kotzebue, Baker is the fourth Native to win the Iditarod and the first since Jerry Riley in 1976. Other Native winners include Emmitt Peters who won in 1975 and Carl Huntington who won in 1974.

For being the first musher to cross the finish line. Baker will collect a prize of $50,400, plus a new Dodge pickup. The prize money boosts his all-time Iditarod winnings to $507,722, which is more than half a million dollars.

Baker becomes the 18th person to win the Iditarod championship. He drew crowds and cheers along the Alaskan coast from fans thrilled at the prospect of victory for someone who is both Alaskan Native and from Western Alaska. According to the Anchorage Daily News, he crossed the Front Street finish line like a politician, shaking hands, signing autographs, and dispensing smiles.

I commend John Baker for setting a great example to all Alaskan Natives. He is an advocate for sobriety and Native culture. He has been racing the Iditarod since 1998. I am very pleased to see people like John Baker promoting our heritage and proving that our communities are still producing exceptional leaders. My staff and I send him best wishes as he returns home to celebrate with friends and family in Kotzebue. Senator Donny Olson

Hello out there,

As I sit here reading the Bible I was wondering (as I often do) how come they don't show the weather on the news for Unalakleet. After all, it is on the Iditarod Trail where the mushers reach the coast of Alaska. I know that we would like to know what it is. Regardless, I'd probably go fishing anyway given the chance—it's so much fun, especially to give them away so I can go out again.

I would please urge all my buddies to read Psalms 94. Then read Psalm 93. Luke—there's nothing like the power of Prayer. Then I happened to come across Lamentations 22:51. Woo-whee!

I was talking to Middy one day and he made a comment about how if people want to talk about people doing things they should sign their name like I do. Seriously though—I was taught that people partment of Homeland Security and Emergency Management said on Monday that there were no elevated levels of radiation recorded in Alaska. Dr. Bernd Jilly with the State Public Health Laboratories explained that data is transmitted in two ways. One is mechanical as the monitor sucks air across a filter, which is changed regularly and then sent to a laboratory in Alabama for readings. A more instant way to find out radiation levels is through readings of beta and gamma radiation that are transmitted via the Internet. Dr. Jilly said the Public Health lab in Anchorage is privy to the data.

On Friday morning several state department heads including the Depart of Homeland Security and the Division of Public Health as well as Alaska Seafood Marketing Institute held a teleconference with media outlets. Greg Wilkinson with the Department of Health said that although there are no harmful levels of radiation detected, people should go over their emergency plans, update their personal home preparedness plan and tune in to local radio and media outlets to stay informed. Asked about potential threats to fish stocks, state epidemiologist Dr. Joe McLaughlin said that based on current science, there is no concern to Alaska seafood stocks.

In Nome, residents and Iditarod visitors have not shown any concerns and went about their lives, welcoming in mushers arriving under the burled arch from the Iditarod Trail.

Zidek said that all readings that were taken over the weekend in Alaska showed normal background levels. "The new monitor that has been set up in Nome will take a while to get a history of readings from, but the levels they get are well within the normal ranges," Zidek said. He added that state and federal partners continue to monitor what's going on in Japan. "The situation is not over yet and warrants a certain level of vigilance," Zidek said. "We will continue this until there is no threat anymore."

Larry's Auto comes to court April 4

By Sandra L. Medearis

As the days get longer and warmer, and Iditarod and slushy streets have replaced most fodder for winter cabin-fever reliever coffee table discussions, one controversy has lasted into the springtime. That issue is the attempt by the Port of Nome to collect parking fees from Larry's Auto through City Manager Josie Bahnke and the State of Alaska court system.

The City has billed Larry's Auto, doing business on Belmont Avenue across from port land, for parking fees for a varying number of cars parked on port property from 2007 through last summer. Larry and Kay Carter, owners of the automotive repair business, have told Nome Common Council in open session and the City's administration that they feel they do not owe parking, they have no lease needing payment, and that patrons of the business have themselves chosen to park their cars on the Port property.

On Jan. 31, a pretrial hearing was rescheduled to 11:30 on April 4 to allow time for the parties to fulfill their declared desires to "work it out." Meanwhile, the City of Nome, through its regular city attorney office on March 9 filed a beefed up complaint asking that the court award the City the $6,168 tariffbased fees that include more than $1,051 in interest at 10.5 percent, plus attorney costs, plus civil penalties to be determined by the court.

The Carters, through their attorney, reiterate in a court filing that they do not owe the City for parking, saying the City's claims are denied and they owe nothing, that the City fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted (a lease agreement), the City failed to mitigate its damages, that the City's injuries are due to third parties, and cite law that bars contradictory allegations. The Carters say they asked for a lease during the period in question and were denied. They also have asked for additional "relief as the court deems just."

Court documents show about half a dozen duns and letters sent to Larry's Auto from mid-2007 through mid-2010 by city managers and the City's port boss, Joy Baker, demanding payment at four cents per square foot per week for vehicles parked on City property. Baker and Bahnke discussed the issue with Larry Carter on July 9 last year. A May 12, 2009 letter over the signature of Banke with copies to city employees Cussy Kauer, Joy Baker and Brooks Chandler, city attorney, revokes Larry's Auto's creditworthy status with the

The City filed a small claims measure against Larry's Auto on Sept. 22. Larry's Auto attorney Ted Stepovich asked that the issue proceed under the formal rules of a civil case a couple weeks later. The

Carters have also asked for a jury

The Nome Common Council passed a resolution Aug. 23 last year authorizing the court filing in a reversal of a unanimous vote the previous meeting, with Council members declaring that Larry's Auto owed no rental fees, and that due diligence had not been performed by City officials because the issue had been allowed to drag out over several years. However, the Council approved the court collection move

Aug. 23, saying it had received additional information, i.e. duns and copies provided by the port director. A short while later, "No Parking" signs appeared on the street in front of Larry's Auto.

At that point, Baker and the Council agreed that the matter could be handled in-house without expenditure of City funds for city attorney involvement. However, an attorney from city attorney Brooks Chandler's office formally entered the case on Jan.26, 2011, according to court documents. Court documents also show that effective Sept. 13, 2010, the City had spent $953 in attorney fees toward collecting from Larry's Auto.

The March 9 revised complaint filed by City of Nome attorneys asks for $6,168 per Port tariff, including $1,051 interest effective Aug. 31,

Proposed OCS oil and gas leasing program includes Chukchi, Beaufort seas

Feds conduct EIS scoping meetings in Arctic coastal communities

By Laurie McNicholas

Residents of Kotzebue, Wainwright, Barrow, Nuiqsut and Kaktovik aired concerns about potential oil and gas development in the Chukchi Sea and Beaufort Sea in meetings last month with officials of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement, formerly the Minerals Management Service in the Dept. of Six representatives of the BOEMRE Alaska Outer Continental Shelf region in Anchorage conducted the scoping (information gathering) meetings in preparation for an Environmental Impact Statement for the proposed 2012-2017 OCS oil and gas leasing program. The BOEMRE team included Dr. James Kendall, interim director, and Jeffrey Lomen, deputy director, Alaska OCS program. Other areas under consideration for the program are Cook Inlet, the Western Gulf of Mexico and the Central Gulf of Mexico.

Plans for the 2012-2017 program were heavily influenced by major events of the past year. On March 31, 2010, Secretary of Interior Kenneth Salazar announced the Obama Administration's new strategy for offshore oil and gas development and exploration. In 2009 the courts had found the 2007-2012 offshore oil and gas leasing program written by the previous administration to be legally flawed.

The new strategy stipulates that no further lease sales in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas will be held under the 2007-2012 program, and Bristol Bay is withdrawn from consideration for oil and gas development through 2017. However, Chukchi Lease Sale 193 was retained under the new strategy, which called for increasing oil and gas exploration in frontier areas such as the Arctic Ocean. The MMS received bids on 488 offshore blocks representing 2.7 million acres in

Chukchi Sea Lease Sale 193 in Feb-

On April 20, an explosion and fire on the Deepwater Horizon drilling rig in the Gulf of Mexico resulted in the largest oil spill in U.S. waters. The spill focused attention on previously identified management problems in the MMS. Salazar issued an order to reorganize the MMS on May 19. He suspended proposed exploratory drilling in the Arctic on Salazar's reorganization order divided the MMS into three new offices, the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management and the Bureau of Safety and Environmental Enforcement under the Assistant Secretary of Land and Minerals Management, and the Office of Natural Resources Revenue under the Assistant Secretary of Policy, Management and Budget. Salazar then renamed the MMS the BOEMRE.

Salazar also postponed scoping meetings originally scheduled in June and July 2010 for the EIS for the 2012-2017 OCS oil and gas leasing program to allow BOEMRE to review and evaluate the safety and environmental requirements of offshore drilling. Despite the delay, Lomen told The Nome Nugget that completion of the next five-year program by mid-2012 is within all timelines. He said the agency has received a good suggestion to establish a BOEMRE liaison in Alaska as part of a negotiating team in a way that avoids conflicts.

Kotzebue scoping meeting

Siikauraq Whiting, mayor of the Northwest Arctic Borough said she told BOEMRE officials they should be in the Arctic if they make decisions that affect the region. "We want to make sure our people are at the table when they make decisions about activities in our back yard," she explained in a phone interview with the Nugget. Whiting invited BOEMRE officials to establish an agency office in borough headquarters during their Kotzebue visit on Feb. 14.

Whiting said she asked the BOEMRE team how many of them had worked for the MMS, and was surprised that most of them raised their hands. She said they told her they are trying to change the way the agency does business. Coastal communities had never seen MMS officials come to discuss OCS drilling with them, she added.

Whiting said it is hard to support oil and gas development in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas because no oil spill response infrastructure is in place. She said plans for OSC oil and gas development in the Arctic must include provisions for the long-term sustainability of communities in the region. "We take all the risks and see minimal benefits," she added.

Barrow scoping meeting

Fifteen to 20 Barrow residents attended a scoping meeting with the BOEMRE team on Feb. 21, reports Karla Kolash, advisor to the North Slope Borough mayor. "Those who testified voiced concerns about potential impacts to wildlife (especially subsistence resources), the impossibility of cleaning up an oil spill, impacts to the whale hunt and the burden of negotiating and enforcing Conflict Avoidance Agreements, wrote Kolash in an email to the Nugget. "These are agreements that are signed between industry and the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commis-

"A number of people voiced general opposition to offshore development," Kolash continued. "Also, the issue of BOEMRE's National Environmental Policy Act guidance was raised (it had been promised by 12/31/10 but has not yet been produced). This guidance should address the issue of what BOEMRE considers 'significant' in the NEPA review."

Kolash said she doesn't know where the idea for a liaison within BOEMRE originated. "But it is a good idea to improve communications between communities that may be impacted by offshore oil and gas development and the regulatory agency," she noted.

Complaint about meetings

Kolash provided a copy of a letter dated March 14 from North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta to BOEMRE officials Kendall and J.F. Bennett, Chief, Branch of Environmental Assessment. The letter expresses appreciation for BOEMRE's efforts to hold scoping meetings in North Slope communities, but includes several concerns about the meetings.

"First, the information presented at the North Slope public meetings was inadequate," Itta wrote. "In order to facilitate relevant, substantive comments and to ensure meaningful participation the public meetings should include intelligible written and oral explanations of the contemplated agency action. However, no printed summaries regarding the purpose of the meeting or the decisions under consideration were available to those in attendance. Nor were any maps or other references available. No written materials were at the meetings, for anyone, including those who might have arrived late and could have used them to better catch up with the discussions."

Scoping meetings slated Feb. 15 and 16 in Point Hope and Point Lay did not take place because BOEMRE's travel plans were disrupted by weather, Itta noted. He encouraged the agency to make another attempt to visit the communities. He also said the scoping meeting in Wainwright was held a day earlier than scheduled, without adequate notice to residents.

In his letter Itta cites the Dept. of Interior's "Environmental Justice Policy;" Executive Order 12,898, which requires federal agencies to work to ensure effective public participation and access to information; and the U.S. Council on Environmental Quality (CEQ) guidance for considering environmental justice under NEPA. He concludes: ...Thus far, BOEMRE's efforts to allow for community participation in this NEPA project have fallen short of what is required by Executive Order 12,898, CEQ and DOI guidance, and the agency's goal of 'restoring public trust.'

Bering Strait concerns

Bering Strait residents who hunt marine mammals for subsistence also want the federal government to heed their concerns about potential oil and gas development in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas. During the Bering Sea Issues Forum held last month in Nome, Merlin Koonooka of Gambell said St. Lawrence Islanders are worried about the Bowhead whale. "The worst is the change in ice and weather in the Bering Sea, so we are concerned and want to protect our marine resources," Koonooka said.... "From the north we see oil exploration headed toward us. It began in the Beaufort and is affecting our whale. The oil industry is affecting our marine resources. We see things happening in the Chukchi in the next 5 years, so we need help with our concerns."

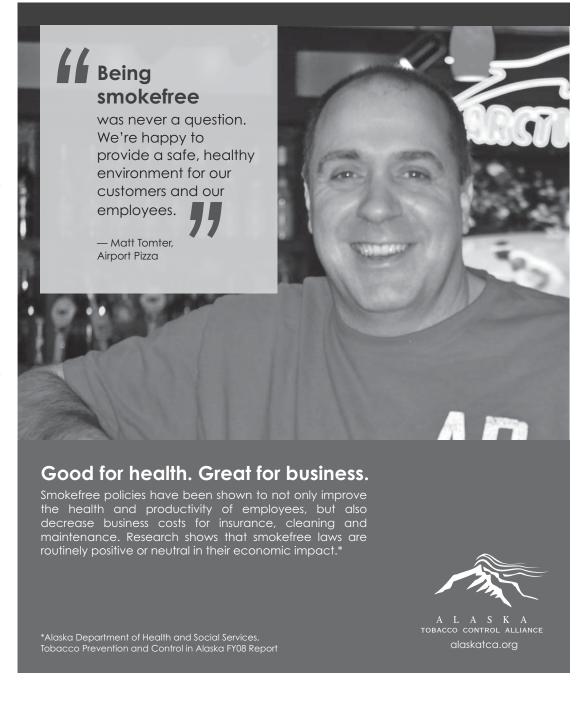

Jonathan Snyder, a U.S. Fish and Wildlife marine mammal biologist who presented information about the Pacific walrus at the forum said the annual subsistence harvest of walrus in the United States and Russia totals about 5,200 animals. Sixty percent of the harvest takes place in the United States, and St. Lawrence Islanders take 80 percent of the U.S. harvest, he added. Snyder said the subsistence harvest of walrus may need adjustment later. The harvest is not regulated, but a co-management agreement between the USFWS and the Eskimo Walrus Commission is in place under terms of the Marine Mammal Protection Act, he noted.

The USFWS recently determined that the Pacific walrus warrants protection under the Endangered Species Act (ESA) due to the loss of sea ice in its Arctic habitat, but an official rulemaking to propose that protection is currently precluded by the need to address other higher priority species. As a result, the walrus will be added to the agency's list of candidates for ESA protection and its future status will be reviewed annually.

Snyder said oil and gas development, fishing and shipping are at modest levels in the walrus range now, but all may have a potential impact in the future, and the USFWS anticipates there will be regulations. The potential for a large oil spill during exploration or production or from shipping is the worst threat to walrus, he added.

SPORTSMAN AWARD—Dee Dee Jonrowe gives Iditarod veteran Allen Moore the Fred Meyer Sportsmanship Award for his action in helping Karin Hendrickson of Willow near Golovin when she was in life threatening trouble. by the hard and fast trail conditions. Scott Janssen, the mushin' mortician, broke some bones in his hands, Robert Nelson had dislocated his shoulder and had it put back in place by a vet, and Rick Swenson crashed at the bottom of the infamous Steps, breaking his collarbone. Swenson said that he consulted with his better half Kelly Williams and she said that if he could take care of the dogs in that condition, he'd be allowed to take her dogs to Nome. And so he did, finishing his 34th Iditarod in 20th place. This won Swenson the musher's choice award for being the most inspirational musher on the Willow musher Karin Hendrickson was the last musher to scratch only about 70 miles before the finish line, in White Mountain. When Deedee Jonrowe presented the sportsmanship award at the musher's banquet to Allen Moore, she told the tale of Hendrickson's dog team being stalled on the sea ice out of Golovin. Hendrickson was dehydrated, had slurred speech and was unable to care for herself or her dog team. She was unable to get into her sleeping bag to warm up and needed help. Apparently, Allan Moore was the only musher to stop and help her out. He got some fluids into her, warmed her up and then hitched Hendrickson's team to his sled and towed her into White Mountain.

Race marshal Mark Nordman in the end was pleased with a successful race. "It was amazing that the weather held out as it did, the trail was good and if anything, the mushers looked like they've been in the sun for too long," said Nordman.

The weather, good trail and the improvements to gear, equipment and advances in dog food and dog care, Nordman said, were factors that allowed for the record breaking times, which both winner John Baker and runner-up Ramey Smyth set.

"I do attribute the faster times to a lot better quality dry pet food that mushers feed nowadays and to advances in gear like the sit-down sleds. That allows for mushers to rest more, to then take better care of the dogs. Everything is just quicker,' Nordman said. However, tales of mushers falling off their seats were abounding, especially with Martin Buser joking about not being able to stay awake. On the long run between Kaltag and Unalakleet, John Baker and Hans Gatt also found themselves falling off their sleds with their dogs stopped. To avoid this, Nordman confirmed that mushers have added seat belts to their seats and also pack loads of five-hour energy drinks. "I do see a lot of people using it when they need to stay awake, not right from the start," said Nordman. But that's nothing new. He said that back in the days when he was running the Iditarod in the 80s, the caffeine boaster of choice was espresso beans.

For the second year in a row, the race also didn't have to issue press releases on a dog death. Head veterinarian Stu Nelson said that advances in research dealing with gastric ulcer prevention seems to make a difference. He also said that the knowledge of mushers caring for their dogs steadily increases. "The combination of genetics, a high level of nutrition and high level of conditioning all has to come together to be a winner," he said. "There were many teams in this race that could've won, but John was the one to prevail." Nelson said that his main concern this year was the heat. "I tell mushers that anytime it's above zero degrees, they need to really be careful and stay on top of hydrating their dogs," he said.

This year, the coveted Leonard Seppala Humanitarian award went to Aliy Zirkle. She looked around the packed to the rim banquet room and said, "The reason why we all are here is because of the dogs." Zirkle said that she tries to help her dogs to be the best they can be by providing good care and guidance. "These dogs are so special to us," she said. "We raise them, we train them, we race them and to see them finish under the burled arch is the best part." It was a great day for the husband and wife team Aliy Zirkle and Allen Moore as they were awarded with the most prestigious awards in the business of dog mushing: humanitarian care and sportsmanship.

Former champion Lance Mackey seemed to be just as popular as ever with fans wanting his autograph. When he got on stage to receive his 16th place trophy, he briefly said that he has to laugh when people ask him if he's disappointed. "Disappointed? A few years ago, my dream was to be able to run this race. Then the dream was to get into the top 20, no, I'm not disappointed. We had a good run and the highlight of my race was to watch my son Cain come up the trail. We'll be back."

Announcing his retirement was finisher Sebastian six-place Schnuelle. Runner up Ramey Smyth said that his wasn't a perfect race as he got lost at Finger Lake, smashed into trees left and right, had a busted up sled, went sideways down the Steps and then was dragged up and down the glaciers at the Gorge. He congratulated John Baker on his magnificent dog team, saying, "I think your dogs would've been here in Nome a day before, you were slowing them down," Smyth said.

When the time came for John Baker to speak, the banquet room went from cheering to quiet and attentive listening. Baker said that he's been trying for 16 years to win this race. "People said I was not competitive if I stayed in Kotzebue and not on the road system," Baker said. He said that Kotzebue to him is the warmest, friendliest place in the world. That's where his support and his family are. He said that he had hoped to see people drumming and dancing. "The drumming is our link to the land and the people. It gets you motivated and into a groove." He then paid tribute to his mother, who taught him to persevere and motivate him and his siblings to pursue their dreams.

The banquet hall was completely silent and then he thanked the audience for sharing this joyful moment with him. Baker was then presented with the winner's trophy, the paycheck and the Golden Harness awards for his lead dogs Velvet and Snickers.

12th Annual Iditarod Fine Art Show

Artists from Nome and surrounding villages competed in the 12th Annual Iditarod Fine Art Show sponsored by the Nome Arts Council and Nome Community Center. The show was held at Old St. Joe's Hall Monday, March 14 through Saturday, March 19th. There were 133 adult and youth entries gracing the art racks. This year's judges were Linda Boord of Sitka, Mari Beth Hartsock of Georgia, Nancy Pilkington of Oklahoma and Hugh Thomas of Nome. They commented that the show was very hard to judge with such a wide variety of amazing artworks. They enjoyed the unique subject matter reflective of the Alaskan northwest and thought the youth work was very impressive.

A reception was held Friday, March 18th from 5-7 p.m., during which time, the public enjoyed refreshments while admiring the artwork and visiting with the artists. Event organizer Angela Hansen extended a welcome and thanked those who participated in and helped with the show. Special thanks went to Delores Orman, Colleen Sellers, Todd Hindman and James Adcox for helping set up the show, Christina Perrigo for typing all the artist information cards and to Cheryl Thompson for making the art and craft show possible in Old St. Joe's. Orman announced the winners as they came forward to accept their prize money and ribbons.

Nome Kennel Club Businessman's race back on the agenda

The windy slopes of Gold Hill welcomed 15 mushers in the Nome Kennel Club's Businessman's Race. After a two-year hiatus, dogs, sleds and mushers made their way to the starting line. The 15 intrepid mushers raced up Gold Hill, down Gold Hill, around the south side of Gold Hill, behind the new hospital building and then along the Bypass Road back to the starting area.

Susan Shinkai claimed first place with a time of 15 minutes and 52 seconds. This was her second first place finish. Susan is a veteran of this trail, having run it over five times. Susan's winning team came from the Owens' dog yard. Eight NKC members brought teams and sleds. There were 15 different teams. The Owens' dog yard claimed the second place finish, with Nick Francis as the driver. Suzanne Krut (AKA Bag Lady Sue) finished in third place running a team from the Thomas' dog yard.

Joshua Marble had 3-legged Copper as one of his leaders. Copper was pleased to have the opportunity to show she can hold her own with the 4-legged variety of sled dogs.

The east wind was strong, but temperatures mild and the sun shining. While there were some tangles, some spills, and some "I want to go my own way" dogs, everyone made it around the course, no team came in without a driver, and all drivers acknowledged they had a great time.

The dogs were more reticent with their commentary at the end of the race, but smiles were visible on all faces and tails were wagging. Those dogs just can't hide a wagging tail.

As is the case with all dog races, there were many, many volunteers helping at the starting line, the finish line and out on the trail. The race could not have taken place without them -thanks to all who helped!

Last week I read a story about a Korean woman named Juju Chang. She is a top anchorwoman on the television network ABC. She was being interviewed by Barbara Walters, and was asked, "What do you think of 'Lion Parwas 13 years old, and that her father took her to a swimming pool in Los Angeles every morning to practice. She ended up in fourth place in the Corral swim competition. Then her parents pushed her to get into top schools, like Stanford and Harvard. Afterward she landed a job at ABC. Her life was not a steady journey - she experienced many ups and downs. Her parents al-how to accept and overcome seemingly daunting challenges. Something similar happens to the children of God. When they disobey God, they do not necessarily suffer bad consequences right away. The people say, "The Lord

These radioactive chemicals are known to cause thyroid cancers and leukemia (a form of cancer in the blood)

Just like 1986, there is widespread concern today over the health effects of nuclear elements released into the environment during an emergency like the current one in Japan. Many people wonder if they should be taking a prophylactic dose of iodine to protect against certain cancers, especially thyroid cancer. This is an important question because medical doses of iodine may have side effects that exacerbate underlying thyroid disease in some patients or cause allergic reactions in others.

Control and Prevention and the Environmental Protection Agency assure the American public that the current risk of radiation exposure to people living in the U.S. including Hawaii and Alaska is miniscule.

Interestingly, after the Chernobyl disaster in 1986, the documented levels of cancer only rose for people who worked directly on the contaminated cleanup site and those who drank milk from cows who ate feed contaminated by the nuclear power plant meltdown. Despite the fact that much of Europe registered slightly elevated levels of environmental radiation, the risk of cancer did not increase overall. This should be reassuring to people that live thousands of miles from the current reactor crisis in Japan.

Only the most sensitive equipment on the west coast has detected an elevation of radiation from the Japan reactor plumes reaching the United States, but the levels remain far below any level of concern. The EPA reports that currently all reporting stations across the U.S. including Alaska show only fluctuating levels of background radiation.

Background radiation is the level of radiation a person is exposed to from food, sunlight exposure, and environmental gases like radon. Experts measure radiation in millisieverts (mSv). Most people are exposed to about 2.4 millisieverts of background radiation each year. For comparison, a typical chest X-ray would expose a person to fewer than 0.1 millisieverts of radiation. Incidentally, fewer than 0.1 millisieverts is also the amount of radiation exposure sustained in a long round-trip cross-country flight.

According to the US National Academy of Sciences, based on data from the Chernobyl disaster, the radiation exposure level has to rise above 100 millisieverts above background levels to increase the overall cancer risk by even 3-4 percent. To put this into perspective, the U.S. second-hand tobacco smoke exposure, which contains numerous cancer-causing chemicals, increases a nonsmoker's chances of developing lung cancer by 20 to 30 percent.

Currently radiation levels across the western coast of the U.S. and Alaska are within normal background ranges. This why experts tell us that the exposure risks from the Fukushima plant at this time are very small. There are therefore no recommendations for patients to take any prophylactic medication, including potassium iodide, because the risks of taking medication at this time outweigh any benefit.

Gregory Alan Kruschek "Grader Greg"

Jan. 6 1959 – Mar. 12 2011

The people of Nome knew not that the eagerly awaited young master equipment operator, they would desperately need upon retirement of "High Blade Harry", would come of age and become each resident's very own personal snow removal specialist.

On January 6, 1959 in Onamia, MN, Bud and Rita Kruschek and older sister Mimi welcomed Gregory Alan Kruschek into the world, soon to be followed by Julie, Jason and baby sister Amy. The Kruschek clan grew up in Hillman, MN, and the hard work and demanding hours of farm living provided Greg with the work ethic for which he is well known and loved.

Greg and Cheri met over a game of pool. Their good natures and sense of competition soon cemented a friendship. Dating and courtship included weekly visits to the nursing home to visit Greg's grandparents, and an opportunity to hone their card playing skills. They dated for a short while and were then engaged on Labor Day 1981. Plans were made to marry in 1983, and in February of that year they set the date – November 5, so as to not interfere with the sacred deer hunting season.

Greg scored a job to drive dump trucks to Seattle for delivery to Nome. Intrigued by the potential opportunities in "the Great Land," Greg trekked north – not knowing Nome would become his home. He worked for the City of Nome for two weeks before deciding pounding nails for various local contractors might be a little more lucrative.

As fate would have it, soon after the wedding date was set, the state of Minnesota changed the hunting season – to start on November 5. While Greg missed only one hunting season (due to 9-11), he had stalked his prize. Despite consternation from others in his hunting party, the wedding went off as planned; Greg and Cheri were blessed with nearly 28 years together

In April 1984 they moved to Nome, which would become their home. On March 31, 1990, Greg welcomed the second love of his life – as the father of Katie. They were inseparable, and as she grew Greg was thrilled to be able to pass on his love of hunting and the outdoors to his little girl. He was so proud of her, and when she grew older and went off to college, he so looked forward to the breaks when she could return home from Boise State.

In July 1995, Greg again returned to city employment and served as a loyal and dedicated member of the city team until his passing. He continued to hone his skills and was considered by many community equipment operators as "the best grader operator there is." He is best known for the special attention he gave to all residents insuring their snow was cleared, not just in the street but their parking areas and yards "from doorknob to doorknob" too. His duties also included assistance to the Port and included annually orchestrating the Iditarod Finish Line on Front Street. Greg prided himself in his work and making improvements for the community; his fingerprints are on many niceties throughout the city. Despite no formal engineering training - one couldn't find a better road and drainage designer anywhere!

Hunting, work and family were the three main elements of his life, and he lived these to the fullest. He had a permanent smile on his face and a song in his heart (and would verbalize these often...changing the words to fit the moment).

Reluctantly Greg succumbed to the technology arena, mastering the art of texting to his beloved wife and daughter. The family framed their messages such that Greg could respond "K", "Ya", or "No." He couldn't be bothered with more...except to Katie, where it was always "Love from your dad."

Greg just loved to be in the outof-doors. Council and the relationships made there meant a lot to him. It was a place where his passion for hunting could be exercised locally. Shortly after a successful hunt, Greg died of natural causes on March 12, 2011 in Council.

Greg is survived by Cheri, his loving wife of 27 years, and daughter, Katie; parents Bud and Rita Kruschek; siblings Mimi Kruschek, Julie (Leo) Nilges, Jason (Kim) Kruschek and Amy (Darrel Saehr); mother-in-law Jeanne Stang; in-laws Wendy (Dom) Li, Shelly (Jim) Schroeder, Wayne (Diane) and Rick (Janice) Stang, as well as many nieces and nephews. He is preceded in death by grandparents Casper and Margaret Kruschek and John and Helen Magdziars; father-in-law Marty Stang, and brother-in-law Alan Stang.

Following a community remembrance service in Nome on March 17, funeral services will be held in Minnesota on March 24. A fund for a memorial in Greg's honor has been established at Credit Union 1, Nome.

Greg made a good home for his family and had utmost pride in caring for them. He enjoyed his friends and loved his job. He worked hard and played hard...enjoying life to its fullest. We are blessed with his memories, and the hole in our hearts will remain forever. Happy Hunting "Buster." We miss you so...

Charles "Chuck" Donald Jones

Longtime Wasilla resident, Mr. Charles "Chuck" Donald Jones, 54, died February 15, 2011 in the Philippines.

Memorial services will be held 1:00 p.m., Saturday, March 26, 2011 at Alcantra Armory, 3501 East Bogard Road in Wasilla. Chaplain Richard Koch will officiate. Military honors will be performed by the National Guard Honor Guard. His cremated remains will be inurned at Fort Richardson National Cemetery and scattered at Mt. Drum in the Wrangell Mountains at a later date.

Charles was born June 6, 1956 to Raymond Jones Sr. and Joycelyn Jones in Utica, NY. He graduated from Rubidoux High School in Riverside, CA in 1975. Charles joined the U.S. Army in 1975 and was a member of the 82nd Airborne Division and then transferred to Anchorage, Alaska in 1977. He then entered the Alaska Army National Guard in 1985 from which he retired in 2002. Charles moved to Nome from 1986 until 1989 when he moved to Wasilla where he has resided ever since. He was the owner/operator of Chuck's Lock and Key Service. Charles enjoyed baseball, bowling, lock smithing and bull riding. He often joked around and called himself, "Honest Chuck."

Charles was followed in death by his mother Joycelyn Jones on March 6, 2011. He was preceded in death by his father, Raymond Jones, Sr. in 1971; brother, Kenneth Jones in 1951. He is survived by his wife, Susan Jones of Wasilla; son, Charles Dwyer of Wasilla; daughter, April Dwyer of Wasilla; son, Cory Jones of Wasilla; granddaughters, Angel Dwyer and Tezlyn Kerrone both of Wasilla; sisters and brothers in-law, Joyce and Rick Rethaford of Spanaway, WA; Cindy and Keith Simpson of Cibolo, TX; and Edith and Scott Hunt of Portsmouth, VA; brother and sister in-law, Raymond and Daisy Jones of Riverside, CA; brothers-in-law, Dicky and Melvin Leonard both of Anchorage, Bobby Leonard of Chitina, and Gene Clark of Chugiak; sisters in-law, Joyce Clark of Chugiak, AK and Maggie Rider of Anchorage; numerous nieces and nephews, cousins and other extended family members.

Party with boys leads to jail sentence and probation

By Sandra L. Medearis

A Nome woman accused of sharing sex, drugs and alcohol with young boys in her home has received a prison sentence of four years with two years suspended.

Sylvia R. Ivanoff, 44, received the sentence March 14 after pleading guilty in December to one count of attempted sex abuse of a minor.

Ivanoff was arraigned and charged in April 2009 after she allegedly, according to court documents, provided marijuana, Monarch brand vodka, Salem cigarettes and sex in a pornographic movie session with three young boys at 114 East

In the plea deal, state prosecution dismissed four other charges: furnishing alcohol to a minor, contributing to the delinquency of a minor, sex abuse of a minor-penetration by a victim under 13 years of age and sex abuse of a minor-penetration by a victim 13-15 years of

In addition to two years in prison, Judge Ben Esch ordered Ivanoff to serve five years supervised probation with special conditions pertaining to a convicted sex offender. Ivanoff has been required to register as a sex offender and is under court ordered requirements as regards contact with youngsters under 16 years of age.

are more important than anything else. After all, you cannot take it with you to the grave. But the imprint of how people will remember you will last forever on the people who love you.

It is not right to inflict pain on someone. Shame on you-you deserve to have your hands cut off; people are meant to be loved and cherished instead.

Just like I often wonder how long I survived in past lives, because I cannot imagine myself not speaking out. Like on the biasesof a community. It seems that it is not how well you might say or do as if you get hired or not. I should know—I come across it a lot and I do many things well. Oh well, God provides for me and my children enough for me to share with others, so I'm happy, long as I could go out I'm happy. And as long as I can say my piece of mind—yea.

I get bugged when I see the GCI commercials. How can we in the bush truly enjoy their services if we get dropped calls all the time?

I believe I am very blessed to have the type of children that I do, somehow I was very lucky. With all the many friends I have met too, and the wonderful country-Thank you God.

I also believe that it would benefit our State if we built our own refinery. Not only would it create jobs, but it should also lower the cost of what we pay for oil and gas. I think that some of that money should also go into our PFD account because that really helps us out in our communities.

It is late Sunday night—into Monday morning, and my kind of shows come on. As usual, since we only get one channel (because some of us can't afford a dish), the TV reception is bum. It's a shame that the person who fixes the GCI dish for sports doesn't like my kind of shows. It's another shame that when my show finally comes on that they seem to be reruns. I thought they made newer ones.

Guess I should quit ranting and get on to something else. Although they are having one of the annual meetings I have been invited by people in Stebbins to go to their Eskimo dancing. As I know and miss some of my friends down there, if I get the chance, that's where I'm running away to. Oh boy, lots of fun.

As always, Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684-0282

United States General Services Administration

Public notice is hereby given for intent by General Services Administration to engage in a lease for space at the Nome Federal Building at 240 Front Street in Nome, Alaska.

The location of Front Street in city of Nome and proximity to the Bering Sea places this site in a FEMA designated 100-year floodplain. Therefore, the location of the building makes it susceptible to flooding at the 100-year flood level. The Nome Federal Building will be disposed from federal ownership, however the government desires to retain space in the building for various federal agencies until new space can become available in the Nome, Alaska market.

Under the President's Executive Order 11988, "Floodplain Management," GSA is required to review possible alternative solutions to the proposed action. Alternatives that will be considered include taking no action. GSA has reviewed the Nome, AK real estate market and has found that there is not enough available real estate to house the 12,000 rentable square feet that GSA is looking for once the federal building is disposed from the GSA inventory. GSA intention is to lease the space from the new owner of the Nome Federal Building for a lease up to two years.

Public comment is invited on these alternatives and interested persons may obtain more information about this action from GSA, Michael Levine, Regional Environmental Program Manager at 253-931-7263. Requests can be sent via e-mail to michael.levine@gsa.gov or by mail to U.S. GSA (10PME), 400 15th St. SW, Auburn, WA 98001 Attn: Michael D. Levine. Comments about this action should be submitted in writing to the above name within 10 days of this notice.

Notice of Application for Reservation of Water Snake River, near Nome, Alaska LAS 20068

Pursuant to AS 46.15 and the rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, notice is hereby given that an application with a priority date of December 27, 1995 has been received from the Alaska Department of Fish and Game, 333 Raspberry Road, Anchorage, Alaska 99518, to reserve water within the Snake River, near Nome, Alaska, for the purpose of maintaining specified instream flow rates to protect fish and wildlife habitat, migration, and propagation. The Department of Natural Resources proposes to establish a reservation of water for the Department of Fish and Game for the Snake River including all connected sloughs, side channels, and flood plains, from approximately River Mile 0, at the mouth of the Snake River, to approximately River Mile 10 at the confluence of Snake River and Russel Creek, for the following location, time periods, and flow rates:

Said portion of the Snake River is located within:

Township	Range	Section
11 S	34 W	4, 5, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 26, 27, 28, 35
10 S	34 W	32, 33

All within the Kateel River Meridian, Cape Nome Recording District, Second Judicial District, State of Alaska.

A reservation of water is an appropriation of water that remains within the stream or lake for any one or a combination of four purposes authorized by statute, including the protection of fish and wildlife habitat, migration, and propagation; recreation and park purposes; navigation and transportation purposes; or sanitary and water quality purposes. Holder of water rights junior to established senior water rights, including reservations or water may be unable to divert or withdraw significant amounts of water for consumptive use when stream flows fall below granted flows or water levels.

Further information about these specific conditions or about any other aspect of this proposed reservation of water may be obtained from the Division by contacting Kimberly Sager at (907) 269-2033 or by email at kimberly.sager@alaska.gov. Any facts tending to show that the rights of any person or the public interest would be adversely or positively affected by the proposed reservation must be submitted in writing by email, fax, or to the Department of Natural Resources, 550 West 7th Avenue, Suite 1020, Anchorage, Alaska 99501-3514 before April 7, 2011, 5:00 PM to be considered. Similarly, comments that might otherwise assist the Division in its determination of the public interest pursuant to AS 46.15.080 (b) are also requested and must be received by the above deadline.

Persons who may be affected by this proposed reservation of water or who have interest in tracking the status of this proposed reservation may request notification of the Departments final decision by writing to the Department at the above address.

The Alaska Department of Natural Resources complies with Title II of the American with Disabilities Act of 1990. The State is prepared to accommodate individuals with disabilities by providing auxiliary aids when requested. Individuals with audio impairments who wish to respond to this notice by telephone may call the Departments Public Information Center in Anchorage between the hours of 10:00 AM and 5:00 PM, M-F at TDD #269-8411.

Report outlines impact of CDQ Program

(Anchorage) - The impact of the Western Alaska Community Development Quota program on 65 eligible villages in western Alaska is detailed in a recently published report by the Western Alaska Community Development Association.

'The CDQ program aims to build strong, fisheries-based economies and alleviate poverty in western Alaska," says Larry Cotter, chairman of WACDA and CEO of the Aleutian Pribilof Island Community Development Association. APICDA is one of six CDO entities which implement the CDQ program. In addition to APICDA, other CDQ entities include the Bristol Bay Economic Development Corporation, the Central Bering Sea Fishermen's Association the Coastal Villages Region Fund, the Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation) and the Yukon Delta Fisheries Development Association.

"In the nearly 20 years since the program's inception, the CDQ entities have demonstrated remarkable success in terms of building their organizations, creating industry partnerships, making direct fishery investments, creating jobs, and investing in people through training and scholarships. This report highlights those successes," Cotter

Aggregated data on investments in economic, human, and community capital illustrate the sustainability principles of the CDQ program. In terms of human capital, the six CDQ entities together provided wage and salary jobs to nearly 2,000 individuals in 2009 with total combined payroll exceeding $25.7 million. In addition, ex-vessel payments of $17.4 million were paid to more than 1,300 fishery permit holders in western Alaska and those permit holders supported an estimated 1,500 crew member jobs. The six CDQ entities granted over $1.9 million in scholarships and invested nearly $800,000 in training and skill development opportunities to eligible residents. In 2009, the CDQ entities also made community capital investments of $11 million toward infrastructure projects and $7.5 million in community benefit projects. Economic investments totaled more than $118 million for the year.

More details are provided in the report along with feature articles and dashboard reports for each CDQ entity. These stories focus on projects that highlight the range of activities the CDQ entities have undertaken, the involvement of Western Alaska residents in those projects, and the impact of the CDQ program on Western Alaska communities and residents.

Copies of the 2009 CDQ Program Report are available by contacting WACDA at (907) 868-7634 or visiting wacda.org.

New gold company plans to placer mine north of Nome

By Diana Haecker

A brand new company, formed to buy 11,500 acres of placer gold mining claims from NovaGold Resources, plans to start mining for gold this summer.

Toronto businessman Robert Salna is one of the four individuals who own the new Nome Gold Alaska Corporation, which is registered in Alaska. Its parent company Nome Gold Ontario Corporation is registered in Toronto, Ontario, Canada. Salna said that the corporation was formed to purchase the Nome alluvial gold holdings from NovaGold Resources Inc, parent of Alaska Gold Co. According to a NovaGold press release, Nome Gold Corp. bought the claims for $21 million and a $4 million bond letter for environmental reclamation. NovaGold issued a press release last week announcing the sale, but it was unknown who the new mining company is that now is one of the largest landowners in town.

Robert Salna said in a phone conversation with The Nome Nugget, that he is one of the four principal owners of Nome Gold Alaska, but he was reluctant to reveal who the other three owners are. Salna, a businessman involved in gold, oil and gas businesses, said he had heard about Nome gold from Bill Steeves. Steeves had worked for Windfall Gold Mining in Nome between 1984 and 1989. Current high gold prices, Steeves' encouraging tales of Nome gold and a promising geological report spiked Salna's interest in buying the Nome alluvial gold claims. "We looked at the historical information and saw significant production that occurred there in the past. When we saw the amount of gold still in the ground, we decided, it would be a good location for us to start," Salna said.

Salna said he came to Nome last year and did some due diligence.

"I was very happy with what I saw," he said. "I saw people prospecting on the beaches and inland and I saw them having gold in their hands."

Nome Gold Alaska Corp. plans to start placer mining with modern heavy equipment at Monroeville. According to a map included in a geological report, Monroeville is the area northeast of Icy View and Dredge #5 and south of the Third Beach line on the foot of Newton Peak.

Salna said he plans to return to Nome in April and start preparing the permitting process for his planned placer gold mining operations. "We are also planning to employ people of Nome," Salna said. He estimates that the operation would employ around 30 people and, depending on their success, maybe even 100. They are planning to utilize highly advanced heavy equipment that requires highly trained and specialized heavy equipment operators.

Asked what their intent is at this point in time, Salna said that they just would like to get started and to get a feel for what is out there. He didn't rule out the additional possibility to placer mine at Dry Creek. A few years ago, Alaska Gold had begun the process to submit permits but then abandoned their plans as there were noise concerns raised by Icy View residents.

Salna said they also looked at the cost to rejuvenate the old dredges at Icy View but haven't come to a conclusion yet. "We look at all possibilities," Salna said.

Asked about their land policy in terms of access, Salna said that they would restrict access to areas where active mining would take place.

Salna assured that Nome Gold Corp. is just using water and gravity to mine and that the only side effect of their mining operation would be noise from moving large amounts of material.

Nome is non-core asset to NovaGold

NovaGold Resources considers its Nome holdings non-core assets and said Donlin Creek and Galore Creek are considered the core assets the company wants to pursue. Spokeswoman Rhylin Bailie said last week that the board of directors last year gave company officers the directive to either sell or close the Nome projects that include Rock Creek, Big Hurrah and the placer as well as gravel operations and holdings.

Back in 1999, NovaGold, then a smaller company run by three principals including Rick Van Nieuwenhuyse, Greg Johnson and Phil St. George, bought the struggling Alaska Gold Company and saw value in the sale of the tailings piles that supplied construction and road projects with needed gravel, and the real estate holdings in and around town. Now NovaGold Resources Inc., is trying to get rid of its Nome assets, including the Rock Creek mine, Big Hurrah, land holdings in and around town as well as its gravel operations.

"We had quite a number of interests looking at Rock Creek and Big Hurrah, but we are picky who we're going to sell it to," said Bailie. "We want them to have the experience and financial ability to be successful operators and we're only going to sell it to somebody who is going to be successful."

She said that the gravel and sand business is currently managed by Alaska Aggregate Sales out of Anchorage.

Although most of its lands have been sold to Nome Gold, Alaska Gold Co. is still in operation, said Bailie. She said there are still 30 employees working to keep the Rock Creek mine in the care and maintenance status and preparing for the spring melt.

HOME GONE—John Hager's house burned to the ground Sunday. Several agencies fought the blaze for hours on two occasions. Hager was at work when the fire started.

House fire hard to douse

By Sandra L. Medearis

John Hager lost his house and his dog Sunday morning when a fire leveled his two-story yellow house on Lester Bench Road in the vicinity of Anvil Mountain Correction Center.

Nome Volunteer Fire Department, joined by state personnel providing water, fought the blaze for three hours Sunday, starting shortly after 11 a.m. according to a spectator. Firefighters, other crews and emergency responders had to return 12 hours later when the fire, letting off a pillar of smoke and sparks, threatened to rekindle again around midnight.

The ashes and debris continued to smoke and smolder into Monday's mid-afternoon. Hager, who owns a janitorial business that has him working nights, came home Sunday morning and discovered the fire and his dog perished.

Council wants bike path on Bypass Road

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Planning Commission has recommended that the General Permit issued to the City of Nome by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers be expanded to include land on the north side of the Nome Bypass Road corridor, the 21st Century Subdivision and along the Nome-Teller Highway corridor, City Manager Josie Bahnke reported to the Nome Common Council on Monday. Bahnke said the five-year permit will expire June 26, 2011.

The USACE issued the General Permit under the Clean Water Act to authorize the placement of dredged and/or fill material and structures into wetlands, for activities associated with residential, public and commercial development projects in Nome. Bahnke said the additions recommended by the planning commission and a map revised by the city engineer will be presented to the council for approval.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel said she had read with interest Bahnke's report to the Planning Commission on the Bypass Road upgrade project. Bahnke told commissioners on March 8 that the Alaska Dept. of Transportation has completed construction of the Bypass Road portion of the project except for final grading, delineators, signs and seeding. She said the current completion date for the portion from East N Street to the Nome-Council Highway is July 31, 2011.

Knodel said when the city agreed to take ownership of the Bypass Road from the state, there was no Public Safety Building or hospital adjacent to the road, and trucks are still using the road. When construction of the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital is completed, hundreds of employees and patients will use the Bypass Road for access to the facility.

Bahnke's report notes that funding for the Bypass Road upgrade in 2006 included a pathway on the north side of the road. "The pedestrian/bike path was submitted by the City of Nome to be included in the Statewide Transportation Improvement Program (STIP) but did not score high enough for inclusion," Bahnke added. She said she is talking with DOT planner Alexa Greene about the STIP and will discuss other options with her.

In 2007 the city and DOT signed a memorandum of agreement stipulating that the city would own and maintain the Bypass Road, Bahnke

Michael Brawner selected as Nome Public Schools' next superintendent

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Board of Education unanimously selected Michael Brawner as the next superintendent of Nome Public Schools on March 24. Brawner has served as middle school principal, activity director and assistant superintendent of the Petersburg School District since 2009. He has accepted a two-year contract as NPS superintendent to begin July 1, according to a press release from Bill Gartung, NPS human resources coordinator. Brawner will replace Jon Wehde, who has resigned as superintendent effective June 30.

nugget@nomenugget.com

Brawner and two other finalists for the position—Joe Banghart, Iditarod School District superintendent from 2004 to 2010, and Steven Gast, principal of Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School—presented brief presentations to about 50 Nome residents at a community forum March 23 at Nome Elementary School. Each candidate then met with a series of three smaller groups to answer questions from NPS school board members, faculty and the public Raised in a farming area in Macon County, Tennessee, Brawner served for nine years in the U.S. Air Force, and he is a Gulf War veteran. He said he began to teach at the junior college level while in the military.

He holds a Specialist in Education and Masters in Education from Tennessee State University and a Bachelor of Science in Liberal Arts from Excelsior College.

Brawner taught computer science for seven years at Hendersonville High School in Hendersonville, TN. "The last three years I was also an Admin Designee," he wrote in an email to the Nugget. "My public school admin experience began at that time."

Brawner's first administrative post was as principal of an elementary school in Carthage, TN, from 2005 to 2006. He served as principal of a school with 530 students in Kindergarten through 8th grade in Celina, TN from 2006 to 2009. Then he was looking for enrichment and was drawn to Alaska because he loves to hunt, fish and hike, he told the audience at the community forum.

Brawner said he became interested in NPS when Jenny Martens, a former business manager for NPS and for the Petersburg School District told him about the NPS Strategic Plan. "I thought the community, board and faculty must be a good team, so I want to join to help the team help the students," he added.

NPS reading initiative

During a group question and answer session with Brawner at the community forum, school board member Barb Nickels noted that NPS recently set a major goal for 90 percent of third graders to read at or above grade level by the end of the 2014 school year. "What do you think?" she asked.

"I implemented that goal five years ago in Tennessee," Brawner replied. "We followed a basic catchup growth plan. We took the philosophy and made it ours.... We started all the way back with the Imagination Library."

Dear Nancy,

I keep marveling at Nadja Roessek's remarkable photo of John Baker coming into Nome, which ran across the top of your front page. It's amazing. She's captured the entire team and musher, Cape Nome in the distant background and town in the near background, with the sun streaming through the team and across the ice. What a Great Race, a great town, and a great photo!

Sue Steinacher Nome, AK

Hi everyone,

I was sitting here talking to one of my buddies about how people are getting sick and dying. We-the-people need to be concerned enough about it to make them test our water, then our land, then our animals. If it is not our water, then it must be the land or the animals. To ensure that more of our family members are safer and quit dying from other things than old age and natural causes, then we should care enough to test the different places where people reside—even the places they do for the subsistence uses. After all people are precious.

I could not believe it. I went to the store to get chicken; not only did I have to buy two bags (because there was only four pieces in each), but it also cost me $20. Oh, and I get 36 regular rolls of tissue for $40. It was either that, or buy 24/18 pack of regular tissue for $19 or 4 to 6 pack for $10. Seriously, we used to have to use catalogs or something to wipe with. We get enough of those in our mail, is that what they want us to use?

My daughter and I were having an argument about why (even though there were a couple of days of spring break) she had to come back from Stebbins—"at least the kids/people don't judge you there for who your mother is," she said. Could almost make me ashamed to say I am from this beautiful, wonderful country of Unalakleet. Except that it has so much to offer. Shame on you for judging someone else just because their parents do this or say that. At least I can say that people thank me for being brave enough to speak out. You yourself are not blameless. All I could do is thank God that my kids turned out good and that they don't mind helping out people. And I think my father would be proud of me too. But shame on you. All people are different from one another. All people are beautiful.

While in Stebbins I was listening to KNOM. They said anyone could call in and make a request, so I tried and they didn't answer and didn't answer. My friend says, "Yeah they say that, but they don't answer, or they try to rush your call!" Why bother if you're going to be that

I want to thank the people in Stebbins, and my cousins in Shaktoolik, for making my kids and I feel welcome while we are there. I sure appreciate it. I also really appreciate the Health Aides and PA as well as Anna, for being there for us. For caring enough for all of us and to go beyond their call of duty-thanks! I am only sorry that we have to bother them on weekends sometimes, but thanks a lot.

I was thinking of GCI again, because they charged me an extra $180 for what? Maybe calling 800 or 866 numbers, or calling other phones not related (or maybe GCI is their parent company now). To GCI, whatever their reason, I disagree. First, you only get the different services (depending on how much you're willing to pay), then you get dropped calls, and I'd bet anything they are so money hungry they charge both phones for the call.

Guess I'd better quit for now. Happy spring everyone. Remember—stay safe and tell people where you're headed if you're traveling). Love you.

As always. Karen Nanouk Unalakleet, AK 99684

Dear Editor,

On March 22, 2011 at approximately 10:30 a.m. the Nome Police received a report that two "City of Nome" sponsorship banners were missing from the area around the Iditarod finish line. The banners are white with the city of Nome seal in blue/gold and the phrase, "Proud Sponsor of the Iditarod" affixed. Each banner measures approximately 8 feet long and 3 feet wide and has brass grommets in each corner for attachment and tie down.

The banners are valued at $175 each for a total loss of $350.

Due to the high winds experienced over the weekend, it is unclear whether the banners were stolen or may have come loose during the wind storm.

If you have any information as to the whereabouts of these items, please notify the Nome Police Department at (907) 443-5262. If found, the banners can be turned in to City Hall or the Nome Police Department.

No Free Rides

A recent TV ad shows a few big name Alaskans with mad faces. They are claiming that oil and gas taxes are driving business out of Alaska. They say they are picking up their toys and taking their jobs to South Dakota. Somewhere in the message was a panic button.

Why are these political and business leaders so upset? Why do they think we should give away the store to big multinational conglomerates who could care less about Alaska? We need to have our politicians come to the understanding that resources on public lands in Alaska belong to Alaskans. We don't want to just give away our wealth. We should not hesitate one second to hold our ground and tax the folks who make big bucks off our resources.

We can't blink. We need to stare down the business and political bullies who would have us believe it is a good thing to give big oil and mineral development a free ride. -N.L.M.-

State files suit over critical habitat designation

The State of Ālaska filed a lawsuit against the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service over its designation of critical habitat for polar bears, which have been listed as "threatened" under the Endangered Species Act. In a separate suit, the state is challenging the decision to list these bears as threatened. The state maintains that the designation of 187,157 square miles of critical habitat for the polar bear would be unnecessary as the agency acknowledges that the designation will not provide substantial protection for the animals. In its lawsuit, the state also contends that the USFWS disregarded federal law by including geographical areas in the designation in which there is little or no evidence of physical or biological features that are essential to conservation of polar bears. The state's attorneys say that Norton Sound is included as critical sea ice habitat even though the mapping does not show the area even within the range of polar bears.

Four indicted for conspiracy to murder judge

Members of a Fairbanks militia group were indicted on an array of state and federal charges for conspiracy to murder a judge and his family as well as a federal IRS employee. The Peacemakers militia leader Francis Schaeffer Cox, 27, of Fairbanks, Coleman Barney, 36, of North Pole and Lonnie, 55, and Karen Vernon, 64, of Salcha were allegedly possessing machine guns, firearms with silencers and possessing unregistered destruction devices. According to the indictments, Lonnie Vernon and his wife Karen conspired to murder the district court judge who presided over a civil tax case against them and also conspired to kill a federal IRS employee. They have pleaded not guilty to any of the charges. Prior to their March 10 arrest, Schaeffer Cox was a fugitive, resisting a minor weapons charge. Trial dates are set

Senate considers re-establishing Alaska Women's Commission

The Senate State Affairs committee considers Senate Bill 53 this week, which would reestablish the Alaska Commission on the Status of Women. The nine member commission would be tasked with conducting research, teaching women about available resources, and making recommendations on education, civil and legal rights, labor and employment and homemaking. The Alaska Commission on the Status of Women was originally created in 1978, and then combined with the Alaska Human Relations Commission in 1993, which continues to exist in statute, but has never been funded and was declared inactive in 1996.

Anchorage Democrat Bettye Davis sponsored the bill and said that the statistics for women in Alaska show the need for a commission to focus on women's issues. For example. Alaska continues to have the highest rates of sexual assault and domestic violence in the nation and women still are not treated equally in the work place, not earning the same amount as their male counterparts.

First bill signed

Governor Sean Parnell on March 11 signed Senate Bill 33 into law, the first bill of the 27th Legislature. The bill was sponsored by Senator Bill Wielechowski and it allows members of the armed forces to designate which of their family members will act as next of kin in the event of their death while in duty status. Representative Bill Thomas carried the companion bill in the House and became a co-sponsor. Alaska currently does not allow service members to choose which family members will handle

House passes performance review bill

The Alaska State House of Representatives passed legislation to push for better accountability and review the performance and operations of state agencies. House Bill 166, sponsored by House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, re-institutes performance reviews for state departments and agencies, a practice ceased in the early 1980s.

The bill forces the legislature to refocus on each agency to decide which expenditures are necessary and required state services. Reviews under the bill would begin this July covering the Department of Corrections. The Legislature, Office of the Governor and Court System would follow. HB 166 passed by a vote of 36 to 1 and moved to the Alaska Senate for consideration.

Denali KidCare bill on the table again

A bill that would extend health care to about 1,300 more Alaskan children and 225 pregnant women is again before the Legislature. Senate Bill 5 is currently in the Senate's Health and Social Services committee. The bill would increase and restore income eligibility levels for the Denali KidCare program to 200 percent of the federal poverty level. The Kaiser Foundation estimates that there are 24,000 uninsured children with medical needs in Alaska. The Legislature overwhelmingly passed a similar bill last year, but Governor Parnell vetoed it over concerns that increased eligibility for the program would require the state to pay for more medically necessary abortions. The Alaska Department of Health and Social Services estimated the additional funding for Denali KidCare would result in no more than 22 more induced terminations. The governor said he doesn't support this bill in its current form.

•New Nome Public Schools superintendent

Dolly Parton's Imagination Library is an early childhood literacy program through which books are provided free to preschoolers, according to the program's web site. Parton launched the program in her home country in east Tennessee in 1996. Participating communities pay for the books and mailing, promote the program, register the children and enter the information into a database. The Dollywood Foundation delivers the books to the home of each child.

Brawner said he and a group of faculty and parents found out who was born when and contacted the parents of preschoolers. Noting that some parents are intimidated by schools, he said his group met with parents at a community center and explained why their participation in the program is important.

Kindergarteners need phonics, first and second graders need to develop fluency in vocabulary, and third graders delve into comprehension, Brawner continued. He said students who struggled were not grouped separately. The school used special education materials and found they worked, he added. He said teachers and teachers' aides received training, and data showed students really made improvements.

Parent/community involvement

Nickels said community and parent involvement underlie the NPS Strategic Plan. She asked Brawner whether he has experience in that area. He indicated that his work to earn a Masters in Education had included community and parent involvement in schools. He said the Petersburg schools have hosted a regional wresting tournament and an art festival, among other activities. "If you want to have a lot of help you have to start planning in September and October," he added. He talked about making plans, getting supplies, setting timelines and holding regular meetings to facilitate parent involvement.

Other questions answered

Board President Gloria Karmun asked Brawner if he has experience in contract negotiations. He said the topic was included in his administrative training and he has collected information for negotiations, but has not been in the room when contract negotiations were conducted. He noted that training in that area is available.

Janeen Sullivan, NPS coordinator for curriculum and assessment asked Brawner about his background in funding for schools. He said his dissertation was on school finances. He provided additional information in an email to the Nugget. "I have completed all of my doctorate work except my dissertation," Brawner wrote. "I studied the subject of school finance and prepared my dissertation for that subject. My comwent different directions...which left me needing to alter my dissertation focus. I'm hoping to finish that work through the Alaska university system.'

Brawner also described his work with youth as a basketball coach in his email to the Nugget. "My most recent basketball coaching experience came while I was the principal at the Celina K-8 School in Celina, TN," he wrote. "The high school coach and I coached grades 7 through 12 together. There were a number of other mixed aged AAU teams we coached as well beginning with third grade kids; however, the main competitive teams were those I just mentioned. We had great teams. The last year those three teams played a combined total of 75 games. We won 64 of those. The varsity team went to the state tournament this year. Good group of kids."

During the community forum, Brawner was asked whether he has a family. He said he was married at one time, but currently is single.

Board members received comments about the candidates for superintendent from Nomeites who attended the forum, and then conducted final interviews with the candidates in a session closed to the public before selecting Brawner for the post.

Boards of Fisheries, Game have new appointees

Governor Sean Parnell appointed Susan Jeffrey and reappointed Bill Brown of Juneau and John Jensen of Petersburg to the Board of Fisheries. He also appointed Nick Yurko of Juneau and reappointed Stanley "Stosh" Hoffman of Bethel and Ted Spraker of Soldotna to the Board of Game. All six of the governor's appointments are subject to confirmation by the Alaska State Legislature, and their terms of service begin July 1, 2011.

Legislators call for price gouging legislation

Six Democratic legislators were not happy about Governor Sean Parnell's statement last week that he had not heard any Democrats step forward to say they want relief for Alaskans at the gas pump. Senators Bill Wielechowski and Hollis French as well as Representatives Chris Tuck, Les Gara, Pete Petersen and Scott Kawasaki sent Governor Parnell a letter urging him to support two bills introduced to protect Alaskans against unscrupulous price gouging. They point out that they have been proposing legislation for years that would protect Alaskans from unjustified and exorbitant gasoline prices. Senate bill 28 would ban Alaskan refiners, distributors and retailers from selling motor oil, diesel or home heating oil at unconscionably and unjustifiably high prices. The companion bill in the House, HB 25, would provide protection for Alaskan communities, individuals, and businesses by prohibiting refineries from charging excessive or exorbitant prices for heating oil, diesel, and automobile and aircraft fuel.

Japan disasters could affect Alaska fish markets

By Diana Haecker

The triple disaster that hit Japan earlier this month with a 8.0 earthquake, a tsunami and the failing cooling towers at the Fukushima Daiichi nuclear plant may have ripple effects on Alaskan fisheries and the seafood market.

As the earthquake happened, Yahoo news reports that schools of fish were swept towards Chile and Alaska, and that Mexican fishermen reportedly had a boom day with full

Back in Japan, before the tsunami hit, fish and other sea life was exposed as the water receded prior to the tsunami, which then ripped into the northeastern seaboard of the Japanese main island of Honshu. Videos posted on news sites showed fishing boats being ripped off their moorings and carried inland by the powerful surging tsunami, smashed into bridges and then ripped out to sea when the waters receded. Underwater, fish schools were ripped apart, reefs destroyed and pollution washed with the receding waters into the sea.

Parts of the Japanese fishing fleet were wiped out, boats and equipment destroyed. One of the most devastated fishing towns, Minamisanriku, was home to 17,000 people, but 10,000 are reported missing or dead.

The town has essentially disappeared.

Along with the destruction of Japan's ability to go fishing, fish processing and packaging facilities are destroyed and with the disruption of power, cold storages are dysfunc-

Japan also is home to the largest chum salmon hatcheries and so far, there are no reports as to how badly the hatcheries were impacted. Most of the chum hatcheries are located offshore from Hokkaido and on north Honshu.

Norton Sound Economic Development Corporation's fishery biologist Charlie Lean says that while it remains to be seen how badly the impact of the tsunami on the Japanese fisheries was, it could affect Alaska chums and the Alaskan market. Lean said that Japan has the world's largest chum salmon hatcheries, which at one point doubled the number of chum in the North Pacific. "There is a possibility that the impacts could be huge and that could have the effect of better chum returns to Alaska," said Lean. He said that salmon that spawned last year in Japan were likely wiped out and the same Alaskan cohorts could find more food and less competition once they reach the ocean feeding grounds just north of the Aleutian Islands and south of the Bering Sea. In three or four years the return of the chum will hold the ultimate answer for how the tsunami disaster affected Western Alaska chums. Chum spend the first ten months in fresh water, then migrate out to sea. There, they stay three to four years feeding before they return to the rivers they were Asides from fisheries, the demand from Japanese buyers could impact the Alaska seafood market. Lean said that most Alaskan salmon are bound for Japan. "Now we could see an increased interest in our fish," Lean said. "There will be more demand for bread and butter fish like chums and pinks, but luxury seafood like king crab, or Tanner crab or king salmon may see a decrease."

Gunnar Knapp, a University of Alaska Anchorage economics professor and an expert on world seafood markets, said that he received an e-mail from the director of the International Institute of Fisheries Economics and Trade, which said that most of the coastal and fishing areas in the region around Sendai were completely destroyed and thousands are dead — the death toll will probably rise. Matsushima and Kamaishi [...] were largely destroyed.

He said that most of the effects on the Alaska seafood industry probably would derive from Japan's very important role as a market for Alaska seafood. The importance of Japan as a market varies widely depending on species and products. Japan is by far the most important market for sablefish, pollock surimi, pollock roe, salmon roe and herring roe.

Frozen salmon, king crab and opilio crab are not as important and Japan is not an important market for canned salmon and halibut.

"So different parts of the Alaska industry are likely to be affected to differing extents. My general instinct is that the events in Japan will be a significant disruption and will cause significant losses for some parts of the Alaska seafood industry, but that it will not be an economic catastrophe for the industry as a whole," said Knapp.

While at this point it is up to speculation as to how the Alaska seafood market would be affected, Knapp said that the first place to look for evidence is to observe the herring roe fishery that starts next week in Sitka. Another fishery and major market for Japan is pollock roe. "The CDO groups get part of their income from the pollock roe fishery and that market has been disrupted because the processing happens in Japan," said

Knapp said that the biggest effects for Alaskan seafood sellers to Japan would be dealing with the disruption to get the fish to markets. Knapp points out that Japanese companies that buy Alaskan fish are having a lot going on. "Any Japanese companies that buy Alaska fish, or that are actively involved in Alaska, are likely to be, to put it mildly, distracted," Knapp wrote in an email. "They have a lot going on that will distract them from and interfere with normal import business. They may have employees and their family members who died or were injured; they may have facilities which were destroyed or damaged, and even companies a long way from the center of things are facing disruptions because people can't get to work. So hardly anyone is likely to be in a 'business as usual' mode."

After the tragedy, the Tsukiji Fish Market in Tokyo, the world's largest fish market, remained open but prices plunged to 50 percent as demand from restaurants and hotels evaporated, reports the seafood website Intrafish.

Iditarod teacher on the trail visits Nome Elementary

TEACHER ON THE TRAIL-Martha Dobson, a sixth grade teacher in Mount Pleasant, NC, showed Nome Elementary School teachers and students how she uses the Iditarod as a teaching tool during a visit on March 30.

By Dave Keller, Principal Nome Elementary School

The 39th Iditarod officially ended on March 20, but the Target 2011 Iditarod Teacher on the Trail was still working in Nome visiting Nome Elementary School and the Head Start program. Martha Dobson spent Monday presenting to kindergarten through sixth grades at the elementary school, showing students and teachers the blog she has maintained this school year with lesson plans, messages and photographs to help classrooms around the world use the Iditarod as a teaching tool. http://itcteacheronthetrail.wordpress.com/

Students enthusiastically recognized the burled arch on Front Street and pictures of mushers as different teams arrived for the end of the race. Students also saw pictures and heard information about other villages and checkpoints in the race.

Dobson is a sixth grade middle school teacher in Mount Pleasant, North Carolina.

For Dobson, a highlight of the visit was going outside at recess to watch Nome Elementary students play in the snow. In her home in North Carolina, there is little snowfall, so students don't have recess in the snow.

In 2005, Dobson traveled to the Iditarod race start to be an Idita-Rider in Phil Morgan's sled, sure that she'd never have a chance to return to The Last Frontier. That experience was the "coolest thing" she's ever done, she says, and the Iditarod bug bit her, hard. Now she's been to four race starts, four Iditarod teachers' conferences, and enjoyed an Alaskan summer vacation.

Dobson says that the Iditarod appeals to her sense of adventure and her appreciation of the unique and challenging event. Her sixth grade students are intrigued by its uniqueness, and Martha has incorporated Iditarod in her classroom and school through lessons not only for her English classes, but classes in other grade levels and subject areas, including math, science and technology.

The Oregon Province of the Society of Jesus agreed to pay out $118 million into a trust for survivors of sexual and physical abuse by 57 Jesuit workers and priests. With the payout, the Jesuits will resolve 524 abuse claims from Alaska, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Idaho.

The Jesuits reached this bankruptcy settlement last Friday. Under the plan, the Oregon Province is going to pay $48.1 million and the Province's insurance carriers will pay $118 million. The plan document says that the total of $166.1 million would be used to compensate the victims, minus bankruptcy administrative expenses. Part of the plan is also addressing non-monetary commitments to protect children in the future.

The attorneys for the victims insented Alaskan abuse victims settling with the Catholic Bishop of Northern Alaska. Before filing for bankruptcy in 2009, the Jesuits already had paid out $50 million in settlements. The settlement does not include the Jesuit's prestigious schools including the Seattle University, Gonzaga University and three prep schools.

Decades of sexual and physical abuse of Alaska Natives and Indian children in Alaska villages, on Indian reservations and boarding schools came to light when in 2003 a former Nome woman settled with the Fairbanks Diocese for close to $1 million after revealing abuse at the hand of Nome priest James Poole. A wave of claimants followed, eventually leading to the bankruptcy declarations of CBNA and the Jesuits.

Census figures will change some district boundaries

By Sandra L. Medearis

Census figures for 2010 released mid-month reveal that Nome has only 90 or so more people than the city had a decade ago in 2000. That's relatively few to help shoulder enormous increases in community-wide costs over the 10 years.

Alaska, as a state, had an overall increase of 13.3 percent in population, 83,299 people, since the 2000 Census. In 1959, when Alaska became a state, the Last Frontier had 210,000 people. That number has more than tripled to 710, 231 in 2010 according to latest census figures. Even so, the state still has 40 House districts, and some of those districts may have to change their shapes to accommodate population growth and recession by mid-June, according to state law. District 39, Nome's district, has lost population, and may be affected.

Now, dividing 710, 231 by 40 districts yields an ideal number of 17,755 per House district, according to a newsletter from Sen. Donald Olson. The Voting Rights Act in 1965 allowed a deviation of 5 percent plus or minus, which drops the ideal number to 16,868 people—but no fewer— for each district.

However, the 2010 Census shows that some districts have significantly fewer folks than the magic 17,755, while some have just too many, and some districts are just right. According to state law, this inequality in numbers has to be adjusted. In our back yard, Kotzebue's District 40 has 17,516 people, meaning Rep. Reggie Joule can probably expect his district to keep its same shape. However, District 39, represented by Neal Foster, has only 15,642, leaving Foster looking for 1,226 more people to keep his district intact. Yukon-

Koyukuk district lost almost 15 percent. Matanuska-Susitna Borough gained a whopping 50 percent in population.

Predictions are that Mat-Su will gain a seat and rural Alaska will lose a seat, according to Olson. Drawing new lines, required to fulfill the one person, one vote established by U.S. Supreme Court case law decades ago, will require negotiation among legislators. The Alaska Redistricting Board got its data from the U.S. Census Borough on March 15. According to the Alaska Constitution, the board has to come up with a redistricting draft plan within 30 days, by April 14. Sixty days after that, the Board will have to have a final plan ready to go. Litigation challenging the redistricting final plan can be filed by any qualified voter within 30 days of the final plan adoption.

"We like to have and keep people who share the same culture and language in the same district," Loren Peterson, legislative aide, said Monday. The idea is to hang on to rural Alaska legislators. District 39 could patch its number with about 650 people from Reggie Joule's district 40 as a beginning. "We don't know where the 1,226 needed is, yet. It is up in the air, but we are punching in the numbers, and Sen. Olson will be negotiating," Peterson said. Olson's Senate district comprises Districts 39 and 40.

The redistricting board last week and this week was holding meetings in seven communities, but not in Nome, despite a letter from Nome's mayor, Denise Michels, asking that the Board meet in Nome so that people could become better informed on the issue. The Board is collecting ideas from folks in Bethel, Anchorage, Wasilla, Juneau, Kotzebue, Fairbanks and Ketchikan.

"We were disappointed there was no meeting scheduled in Nome, but people can e-mail their comments and ideas to the Alaska Redistricting Board: info@akredistricting.org or fax them to 907-269-6691. There will be a statewide teleconference March 31 from noon to 7 p.m. Those wanting to make comment can do so at their local Legislative Information Offices." Peterson said. In Nome, that office is on the east end of the State Building on the ground floor.

The five-member Board includes a rural Alaskan, Marie N. Greene of NANA Regional Corp. in Kotzebue.

Olson sponsored a bill during the last Legislature to expand the legislature, but after legislative approval, Ballot Measure 1 did not survive the November General Election.

The National Snow and Ice Data Center is reporting that the Arctic sea ice likely reached its maximum extent for the winter and measures 5.65 million square miles. This puts it equal to the year 2006 when the sea ice recorded the lowest maximum extent since the start of satellite recording in 1979. The average sea ice extent measured between 1979 and the year 2000 was 6.12 million square miles.

Arctic sea ice from December through February also reached record lows as winter temperatures across much of the Arctic were anomalously warm, reaching 4 to 11°F above normal in January.

The National Snow and Ice Data center reports that as of March 22, the ice extent has declined for five straight days. There is still a chance that the ice extent could expand again. Sea ice in February and March tends to be quite variable, because ice near the edge is thin and shattered. The thin ice is very sensitive to weather, moving or melting quickly in response to changing winds and temperatures, and it often grows and recedes near the maximum extent for several days or weeks, as it has done this year. Since the start of the satellite record in 1979, the maximum Arctic sea ice extent has occurred as early as February 18 and as late as March 31, with an average date of March 6.

This news comes as Congress is about to go back to work after spring break and several attempts are underway to modify the federal Clean Air Act. This includes Fred Upton's (R-Mich.) legislation to repeal Clean Air Act protections aimed at slowing the buildup of carbon dioxide pollution. The bill would allow unlimited carbon pollution from power plants and other industrial polluters, and it passed the House Energy and Commerce Committee last week. Senator Mitch McConnell (R-Ken.) introduced the same language as an amendment to an unrelated small business bill in the Senate. Senator Jay Rockefeller (D-W.Va.) is attempting to delay the Environmental Protection Agency's implementation of Clean Air Act protections to reduce carbon emissions by two years. Bloomberg reports that Rockefeller is leading other Senate Democrats to suspend EPA rules, which, he said, would burden businesses and hurt the economy. The Democrat has said the two-year delay is needed to give Congress time to craft a new energy bill.

FAST START-Senior Sierra Corsetti of Unalakleet and freshman Rosa Schmidt of Nome lead a pack of high school girls in the 7.5-kilometer ski race at the 33rd Annual Bering Strait School District's Ski and Biathlon Championships in White Mountain. Schmidt would go on to win the ski race by 55 seconds, while Corsetti would come back to nip Schmidt the next

Corsetti outlasts Schmidt for top skier award at 33rd BSSD Ski and Biathlon Championships

By NST ReportersThe 33rd annual Bering Strait School District Ski and Biathlon Championships held in White Mountain March 24-25 produced two exciting battles for top spots in both the high school boys and high school girls divisions.

The high school girls division featured a battle between former junior high girl Skimeisters (the award earned by the top skier in an age category) who were competing in their first BSSD high school races. Unalakleet senior Sierra Corsetti and Nome freshman Rosa Schmidt split results in the two-day event, with Schmidt winning gold in the 7.5kilometer ski race by a margin of 55 seconds on Thursday.

Corsetti, using her past international experience on Team Alaska's Arctic Winter Games biathlon team, was able to earn the gold medal in the biathlon race by outshooting Schmidt on the shooting range on Friday, hitting 7 shots to Schmidt's 5. Two, 65-meter penalty laps added too much to Schmidt's time, and resulted in Corsetti having an overall 21-second two-day advantage, giving her the coveted Skimeister award.

The high school division featured a pair of Corsetti's Arctic Winter Games 2010 teammates, senior Emerson Conger of Nome, and sophomore Asa Bergamaschi of White Mountain, both also former junior high Skimeisters. In one of the closest BSSD ski races in the last 10 years, Conger was able to fend off the hometown favorite by a scant three seconds on the 7.5-kilometer ski course.

On Friday, the two picked up where they left off, as each of the experienced biathletes knocked down 9 of 10 targets in the 5.4-kilometer biathlon race. For the second day in a row, Conger was able to win by the narrowest of margins, topping Bergamaschi by 6 seconds, and captured his fifth consecutive BSSD Skimeis-

The efforts by Schmidt and Conger were enough to guide their respective high school squads to top team trophies. Schmidt used a double-bronze performance by junior Caity Tozier to capture Nome's third consecutive BSSD girl's high school trophy.

Conger used bronze medal efforts by two different senior teammates to bring the fourth consecutive BSSD boys high school trophy back to Nome. Sam Schmidt posted the third fastest time in the ski race, while first year skier Mark Schmidt used a perfect shooting performance to take third in the biathlon race.

Corsetti and teammate Katie Daniels took the second place trophy for Unalakleet, while Bergamaschi teamed up with Vincent Tomalonis to earn the second place high school boys trophy for White Mountain.

Both junior high divisions produced first-time BSSD Skimeisters. In the girls division, Unalakleet's Ally Daniels earned gold by beating White Mountain's Anna Prentice by 2 minutes 29 seconds in the 4-kilometer ski race on Thursday.

Even though Prentice hit all 10 of her shots in Friday's biathlon race, Daniel's five shots proved to be enough, as she was able to build a 2 minute, 17 second advantage. Daniel's and Prentice were followed each day by double bronze medalist Linda Kimoktoak of Unalakleet, who also earned the 2011 Most Improved Skier Award.

Daniels and Kimoktoak helped the Unalakleet squad earn its fourth consecutive junior high team trophy. Prentice, along with teammate Angel Agloinga, took home the second place trophy for White Mountain. Breane Hale and Alice Otten, who hit 9 out of 10, and 10 out of 10 respectively in the biathlon race, helped Stebbins win the third place junior high girls trophy.

Double gold medal winner, White Mountain's Isaac McElwee, became the second junior high boys athlete in as many years to win both the 2011 Skimeister award as well as the 2011 Most Improved Skier award. He was able to outlast silver medalist Cory Ningeulook of Shishmaref (the 2010 junior high Skimeister/Most Improved winner), by a margin of 35 seconds in the 4-kilometer ski race, and by 30 seconds in the biathlon.

The junior high bronze medal in the ski race went to White Mountain's Sigfred Brown, while Unalakleet's Sikulik Johnson's perfect 10 out of 10 shooting helped him earn the bronze medal in the biathlon.

Team Trophies for junior high boys would be earned by White Mountain, with Unalakleet taking second place, and Golovin taking third place.

The BSSD Ski and Biathlon Championships also featured a marksmanship competition. The winners of respective age divisions were Hannah Tozier of Nome, high school girls, Jarad Billingsley of Saint Michael, high school boys, Kimoktoak, junior high girls, and Unalakleet's Talon Erickson, junior high boys.

The sportsmanship trophy for the 2011 BSSD Ski and Biathlon Championships was earned by the team from Nome.

Both the BSSD and Nome use the regional results from the BSSD Championships as qualifiers for the rural state meet, hosted by the Western Interior Ski Association, which will be held in White Mountain on March 31 - April 2.

Qualifiers for the BSSD are Saint Michael's Dominic Richardson, Billingsley, AJ Andrews, and John Washington, Shishmaref's Sam Tocktoo and Ningeulook, Unalkleet's Johnson, Jayden Wilson, Kayden Erickson, Kimoktoak, Ada Harvey, and Christa Eakon, Golovin's Hank Henry, Nathaniel Piscoya, and Emily Henry, Koyuk's Amanda Homekingkeo. Skiers from the host site automatically qualify.

State qualifers from the Nome Ski and Biathlon team are Conger, Sam Schmidt, Steiger, Quinn Tozier, Tim Schmidt, Rosa Schmidt, Caity Tozier, Hannah Tozier, Miranda Murphy, Lindsay Floyd, Jannelle Trowbridge, and Liam Floyd.

Which medication should you take for flu pains?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Several different viral illnesses have hit the region. People who have caught one of these versions of a "cold" often describe a deep ache in the muscles and joints, called myalgias. These aches may also be associated with a lowgrade fever and intermittent headache. Everything a person needs to treat these aches and pains can be purchased over the counter. But a quick visit to the store for a simple medication is often made complex by an endless array of options on the medicine aisle with drugs packaged in colorful boxes printed with strange names followed by tantalizing claims of efficacy.

Perhaps a little guidance will go a long way in making the choice of medication easier to make.

If you look closely at the fine print on each of the boxes, you will notice that most of the medications contain the same basic ingredients. The goal is to find the ingredient that best treats your symptoms without interfering with your other medical conditions or medications you may be taking for these other conditions.

There are basically four options for treating the aches and pains that accompany the flu and other viral illnesses: acetaminophen (Tylenol); ibuprofen (Motrin or Advil); naproxen (Aleve); or aspirin (Bayer).

Your doctor may recommend one of these medications over another, but usually this has little to do with whether a medication works better than the others. Each medication provides about the same level of relief as the others. However, in some cases a medication may be dangerous for certain patients.

Aspirin should not be given to children under age 18 because it may cause Reye's Syndrome, a rare disease affecting the liver and central nervous system.

Most pediatricians recommend ibuprofen for children because it reduces the inflammation that causes the symptoms of fever, aches, and fatigue without increasing the risk of Reye's syndrome.

Ibuprofen and naproxen both work well for adults, but should not be taken by people with severe asthma or peptic ulcer disease because these medications prevent the relaxation of airways and increase acid production in the stomach.

Ibuprofen and naproxen also block an enzyme that controls blood pressure by changing blood flow through the kidneys. Therefore, these medications should be taken with caution by people with high blood pressure and people with underlying kidney disease, like those with advanced diabetes.

Of these four medications, acetaminophen is the safest to use durpregnancy. Ibuprofen. naproxen, and aspirin should be avoided during pregnancy, especially when the mother is close to term due to negative effects these medications may have on the baby's blood cells and heart ves-

Nursing mothers may use acetaminophen, ibuprofen, naproxen, but they should avoid aspirin which crosses into the breast milk and may cause problems in nursing infants.

Acetaminophen is a centrally acting medication. This means it primarily acts on the brain, particularly the parts that sense pain and control body temperature. Because it does not affect other parts of the body, it is a safer choice for people who cannot take an anti-inflammatory medication like ibuprofen, naproxen, or aspirin. There is one exception to this principle. Acetaminophen is processed by the liver and may be dangerous for people with underlying liver disease or those consuming excess amounts of alcohol.

The most concerning misuse of acetaminophen comes from the fact that it is found in many overthe-counter medications. People who take several different medications in order to treat various symptoms may risk harming their liver by failing to notice that acetaminophen is a primary ingredient in several different medications. Reading labels is important.

Remember that all medications have side effects, and the fact that a medication is available "overthe-counter" does not guarantee

Also remember that good nutrition and relative rest go a long way in shortening the duration of an illness. Medications have a place in helping people through times of sickness, but the idea is to take the least amount of medication needed to reduce undesirable symptoms.

Contact your doctor if you have concerns about which medication is appropriate for you or a family

Rep. Foster's Report from Juneau

By Rep. Neal Foster Greetings from Juneau!

After enjoying some time at home in Nome for the end of the Iditarod Sled Dog Race and seeing many of you, I returned to the state capital where the end of the regular session is rapidly approaching.

The Big Picture

It's unclear whether we'll pass some kind of oil tax change by the time the 90-day session ends on April 17, but we're likely to get done with basic things like the budget and extending the life of boards and commissions that would expire without legislative action – such as the Regulatory Commission of Alaska, which plays a key role in assuring consumers pay fair electric, heating, and telecommunications rates, and the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, which controls the sale and flow of beer, wine, and liquor.

Will we extend the life of the Alaska coastal management program?

get done gram?

By Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God for the Nome Ministerial Association

A sour grapes attitude

"What do you people mean by quoting this proverb about the land of Israel: 'The fathers eat sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge?'" ~ Ezekiel 18:2 ~

Are you a victim of the "Sour Grape" mentality? Do you feel you're a victim of what your parents have done; that you're the product of a poor environment?

This is what the children of Israel were saying. The Living Bible describes it more literally, "Why do people use this (sour grape) proverb about the land of Israel: the children are punished for their father's sins? As I live, say the Lord God, you will not use this proverb any more . . . for all souls are mine to judge. . . and my rule is this: It is for man's own sins that he will die." Ezekiel 18:2-4

Many people were complaining to the prophet Ezekiel that they were being punished for their parents' sins; that they were victims of circumstances. But the Lord set them straight. He said, "Forget about your sour-grape philosophy – it's not worth anything."

Be careful you don't make the same mistake. Don't blame your folks for your present condition. Your school, church, friends, place of work, relatives, town, or other things are not to be blamed for your downfall or present condition.

Take responsibility for your own situation. If you don't like your life the way it is, remember these things:

- •Your personal commitment to God will change you spiritually.
- •Your personal commitment to study will change you intellectually.
- •Your personal commitment to work and study will change your situation financially.
- •Your personal commitment to others will change you socially.

Folks, the best way to improve your situation is to understand that you are responsible for the decisions you make in this life. The sooner you begin to accept responsibility for your situation, the sooner you will see the changes you need to make to improve your life. And the sooner you begin to seek God's will for your life and determine in your heart to make the changes that are necessary to fulfill his will, the happier and more content you will be! Remember— Stop living your life with a "Sour Grapes" attitude. You've got what it takes to be a winner!

That's up in the air as controversy continues to swirl around a system that once allowed coastal districts a greater role in the development of resources that affect subsistence, habitat, land, air, and water in those regions

Without legislative action, it comes to an end on July 1.

The governor wants to extend the current program by six years, but many rural legislators aren't ready to sign off on that until changes are made to allow greater local participation in state and federal coastal management decisions. Some are willing to let the state system die if the governor doesn't make some concessions on this. One option is to extend the program by a year to allow more time to craft a compromise

Meanwhile, the state continues to enjoy robust revenues, thanks to high oil prices.

While that may hit us in the wallet at home when we pay our electric and heating bills, the state continues to enjoy budget surpluses.

In the works here in the Capitol are plans to add a billion dollars to a state budget reserve and $400 million to the Power Cost Equalization Endowment, thus assuring funding security for a program that helps defray high energy costs in rural Alaska.

There's talk, too, of an energy package that will benefit the entire state. It might include more money for weatherization, energy rebates, low-income heating assistance, and the renewable energy fund.

We also expect to have a stronger capital budget than the one that the governor initially put forward.

What's not clear at this writing is whether we'll see an increase in funding for education; although, funding for a pre-kindergarten pilot program has been restored by the Senate. It's also a bit fuzzy now whether the merit-based scholarship program that the governor wants will get the green light.

On the bright side, the legislature is on track forf supporting the governor's anti-domestic violence campaign and his commitment to fund an additional 15 village public safety officers.

Redistricting

Work is underway to redraw election boundaries based on new population numbers recently released by the U.S. Census.

Because of strong population gains in Anchorage and the Mat-Su, rural Alaska is expected to lose a

Barrow Dancers

Last weekend my family and I attended and very much enjoyed the world renowned Barrow Dancers at the Juneau Douglas High School Auditorium. It is always great to see dancers from the district, and I thank them very much for coming all the way down to Juneau and sharing their cultural traditions. My gratitude also goes out to the Juneau Arts and Humanities Council for sponsoring this special event.

Redistricting

During the 1960s, a series of Supreme Court cases established the idea of "One Person, One Vote" and further ruled the boundaries of Legislative Districts must be redrawn every ten years according to census population findings and each district must be as equal as possible.

In an effort to provide adequate representation to rural Alaska, I sponsored a bill last year which passed the legislature and was signed by the governor. The bill to expand the legislature became Ballot Measure 1 during the November General Eection. Unfortunately this measure did not pass even though Alaska's population has grown exponentially since statehood in 1959 from the estimated 210,000 to the most recent Census Bureau figures with totals of 710,231.

Since the measure did not pass, the number of legislators will remain the same, which I'm afraid will result in less rural representation. It is projected the Matsu-Borough, which grew by more than 50 percent since 2000, will gain at least a seat and rural Alaska will lose that seat. According to Census figures, the Yukon-Koyukuk region experienced the largest decline in population (14.7 percent, falling from 6,551 to 5,588).

On March 15, the Alaska Redistricting Board received its 2010 Census redistricting data from the U.S. Census Bureau. That data has been posted on the Board's website at http://www.akredistricting.org.

Taking the state's total population of 710,231 and dividing it by 40 house districts, each ideal district population figure is 17,755. With the Voting Rights Act of 1965, states are allowed a 5 percent deviation from that figure, requiring at least 16,868 people per district. Currently, my staff and I along with other legislators are researching the 2010 census data and will be negotiating the redistricting lines. According to the data provided by the Census Bureau, the total population for District 39, which is Rep. Foster's district, is 15,642 and Rep. Reggie Joule's District 40 population was 17,516. Foster's district is estimated to be short by approximately 1,226 people. I hope having Marie Greene of Kotzebue on the Redistricting Board will help ensure our rural communities have fair consideration in the redrawing of the district lines.

According to Article VI of the Alaska Constitution, the Board must release a proposed redistricting plan or plans within 30 days of receipt of the census data, which will House seat or two. In House District 39 alone, we are nearly 12 percent below the ideal size of 17, 755 people per House seat; therefore, a new election district must expand to include more towns and villages.

The five-member Alaska Redistricting Board must come up with a new election map by April 14.

After that, it will hit the road to get public feedback on it before approving a final plan 60 days later on June

Unlike 10 years ago when election maps were last redrawn, the board plans to hold a public hearing in Nome. As soon as it nails down a date, I'll notify everyone.

For more information on this hugely important topic, go to www.akredistricting.org.

Radiation

As reported by The Nome Nugget on March 24, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency has set up a monitor in Nome to track radioactive fallout from damaged nuclear reactors in Japan following the great Sendai earthquake and tsunami. In the legislature, state officials assured us that there is no anticipated threat of harmful levels of radiation to reach Alaska and that Alaska seafood is safe. They also remind all Alaskans to have home emergency kits and a family response plan in the event that we should suffer a disaster similar to that which afflicted

Energy potential and conservation

As co-chair of the House Special Committee on Energy, I have enjoyed learning more and more about the impressive work of people on energy, energy efficiency and conser-

On March 24, Bob Swenson of the Alaska Division of Geological and Geophysical Surveys highlighted natural gas potential in Alaska that normally doesn't enjoy the attention that the rich fields in the North Slope and Cook Inlet do. The Norton Sound Basin alone may hold up to 2.7 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, he said. It appears to be too costly now to develop because of its remote location, but if it or other gas-rich basins such as those in the Navarin, Susitna, and Nenana areas were plopped down somewhere in the Lower 48, rest assured, they would be highly touted and highly developed fields.

Perhaps the best way to look at them now is to see them as though they were like having money in the bank – a vault to be tapped at a time when market forces are better aligned.

We also heard the good folks at the Rural Alaska Community Action Program describe the successes they're having promoting smarter energy use in villages through their Energy Wise program. Last year, they gave part-time jobs to 160 rural Alaskans and served 2,000 homes, providing each one $300 in supplies such as weather stripping, compact fluorescent lights, pipe insulation, a water heater blanket, and more.

The result? People saved at least $50 a month on electricity and heating – which adds up to $600 a year.

NOTICE OF SFY 2012 THHP PRELIMINARY APPLICATION

In July 2011, Alaska Housing Finance Corporation (AHFC) will announce the SFY 2012 Notice of Funding Availability (NOFA) for the Teacher, Health Professional, and Public Safety Housing Grant Program. Under this program, competitive funding is available for new construction, rehabilitation, or acquisition of rural rental housing. The program provides grant funding to fill the gap between a project's capacity to carry debt and the total development cost of the project, given reasonable expenses for the project.

Application for THHP funding is a three (3) step process. Applicants must (1) register for the online application system, (2) submit a Pre-Application using the online application system and (3) submit a THHP Application using the online application system. This Notice contains requirements and deadline for the online (1) requirements and deadlines for Steps (1) and (2). Applicants will NOT be eligible to apply for THHP funding unless they meet both deadlines for Steps (1) and (2).

Step (1): Applicants must register to use the on-line application system. AHFC must receive a registration request for the online application system no later than 4:30 p.m. (Anchorage time) on May 3, 2011.

Step (2): On May 10, 2011, applicants who have successfully submitted a registration request for the online application system will be invited to submit the SFY2012 Teacher, Health Professional, and Public Safety Housing Pre-application. The completed Pre-application must be submitted through the online applica-tion system no later than July 7, 2010 at 4:30 p.m. Anchorage time.

Step (3): The preliminary application will provide sufficient information for AHFC to determine if the project proposal is an eligible activity and can be invited forward into the full SFY 2012 Teacher, Health Professional, and Public Safety Housing Grant Program compe

The deadline to register for access to the on-line application system is 4:30 p.m. (Anchor-age time) on May 3, 2010. All entities wishing to submit a Pre-Application must submit req istration requests for access to the online ap-plication system according to this deadline. ## City Council sees need for bike path on Bypass Road

noted. Mayor Denise Michaels said the bike path was a wish if there were enough dollars, and there weren't. She suggested the city ask DOT for the bike path plans to determine what the city can do to provide one.

Councilman Stan Andersen suggested naming the Bypass Road after Greg Kruschek, who worked for the city as a grader operator from 1995 until his sudden death on March 12. Bahnke's report to the council included this tribute to Kruschek: "Aside from being the Best Grader Operator in town, Greg also provided his expert advice on engineering projects, drainage issues, road construction and overall leadership for the Public Works Road Crew. The City of Nome will officially retire Greg's radio call sign—PW 4 in honor and remembrance. Our hearts and prayers go out to the Kruschek family for their loss."

Meetings still on Mondays

The council heard the second reading of a proposed ordinance to change the regular city council meetings to 5:30 p.m. on the second and fourth Wednesdays of the month. For a number of years the council has held its regular meetings at 7:30 p.m. on the second and fourth Mondays of the month. The council received a letter from Nancy McGuire, editor and publisher of The Nome Nugget regarding the proposed change.

"The proposed ordinance to move the Common Council meeting day to Wednesday is a move that ill serves the public," McGuire wrote. "I hope you take this into consideration. I have no problem with a move to 5:30 p.m. Citizens need time to absorb information prior to the city's actions." The weekly edition of the Nugget goes to press on Tuesdays and includes news of the council's meetings on Mondays.

Knodel moved to amend the proposed ordinance to read "the second and fourth Mondays." Councilman Randy Pomeranz seconded the motion. The council unanimously approved the amendment and then unanimously approved the main motion to hold regular meetings at 5:30 p.m. on the second and fourth Mondays of the month.

The council heard the first reading of an ordinance amending sections of the Nome Code of Ordinances containing penalty provisions to reference the state surcharge provision required under AS 12.55.039. A motion to put the ordinance into second reading at the next regular council meeting passed unanimously. "I have no clue what it is," Andersen told Bahnke. "Please explain it before the next meeting."

Resolutions adopted

Council members discussed a resolution recommending the adoption of fees for Moonlight Wells permit applications as follows: $500 for major activity permits and $300 for minor activity permits. In 2006 the city adopted a Potable Water Supply ordinance to protect is potable water supply including aquifers for Moonlight Springs and Moonlight Wells.

The city also has identified and adopted best management practices that include an application process and procedures for minor and major activity permitted within the Moonlight Wells Protection Area.

An example of a minor activity permit is the permit the city issued to Melvin L. Terry, dba Nome AK Gold Concentrates, LLC to operate a placer mine within the Moonlight Wells protection area in the 2011 mining season. Last month the council authorized the city to issue the permit.

Anderson said the proposed fees are not high enough for the city to recover the costs of processing permit applications. He said the city engineer reviews the application and conducts a site inspection and the city pays for a newspaper advertisement with information about the application. He moved to amend the resolution to charge $1,000 for a major activity permit and $500 for a minor activity permit at Moonlight Wells. The council unanimously approved the amendment and then approved the resolution. Bahnke said the city has never received a Moonlight Wells major activity permit application during her tenure as city manager.

The council approved a resolution supporting a bill in the Alaska Legislature to end requirements that employers who terminate some or all participation in the Public Employees Retirement System (PERS) of Alaska pay termination costs, and making the changes retroactive.

Andersen asked for a description of the lengthy resolution in layman's terms. "There is none," said Michels. Bahnke said the Alaska Municipal League is supporting SB 125 because cities are facing large financial costs under the current law. The following excerpt from the resolution illustrates the potential mag-proved a motion by Knodel for at least two persons to attend the 2011 West Coast Pilot's Conference April 20-22 at the Hotel Captain Cook in Anchorage. Michels received a written invitation from Captain David Artz of the Alaska Marine Pilots to attend the conference with pilotage groups from Washington, Oregon, California, Hawaii and Canada.

"...As a tireless advocate for Alaskans and your close relationship with our maritime community it would be a privilege to have you along with other members of our Alaska Delegation attend this event," Artz wrote.

The council discussed plans for the city's annual brunch for the Alaska Legislature. Utility Manager John Handeland said he, Bahnke, the city's lobbyist Wendy Chamberlain and others have scheduled the brunch for April 9 at a Juneau hotel. The city has hosted the brunch on "Aside from being the Best Grader Operator in town, Greg also provided his expert advice on engineering projects, drainage issues, road construction and overall leadership for the Public Works Road Crew. . .

- Josie Bahnke

nitude of the costs.

"Whereas, if a PERS employer reduces its employee count because it made a decision to alter or suspend one of its programs or services, per 2 AAC 35.235 PERS might send it three bills. The first bill will be for the cost of doing a termination study. The second bill will be what the study says you owe the System, due to the employees change(s) you made. The third bill, the big bill, is the one that will require the employer to pay the past service cost (PSC) on each position's salary PERS said needed to be opted out of PERS. The employer will be required to pay the PSC (currently 18.63%) on the salary(s) of the position(s) PERS said the employer needed to opt out, until the unfunded obligation is paid off, maybe 30 years from now. These three bills cumulatively can run from hundreds of thousands of dollars to several millions of dollars....'

The resolution says the City of Nome, while supporting a sustainable salary base to pay off the PERS unfunded obligation, believes that AS 39.35.625 and any other similar statues or regulations that require termination studies should be repealed. The resolution also supports adoption and passage of a bill removing termination study requirements from the law.

Foreclosure proceedings

Acting City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck informed the council by memorandum on March 24 that the Clerk's Office has completed foreclosure proceedings for the real property tax years of 2005-2006 and 2006-2007. Ten Eyck said the only property that was not redeemed was that of Tim Gologergen at 207 West D St., Block 26 Lot 19.

"I shall be presenting the Council with a resolution at the end of April to pursue another foreclosure lawsuit for the years 2006-2007 (to capture the remnant payments from the foreclosure years 2005-2005 properties which still accrued taxes) along with the tax years 2008, 2009, and 2010," she wrote.

Other council actions

The council reviewed notice of a liquor license renewal application from Tomter Enterprises LLC, dba Airport Pizza from the State Alcohol Beverage Control Board. The council received a report from the Nome Police Dept. that Airport Pizza has had no liquor law violations, nor has the department been called for any disturbances in the past year. The council found no reason to object to the renewal.

The council unanimously ap-

Easter Sunday or Mother's Day in the past, but this year the legislature will adjourn prior to those days on April 19. Bahnke noted that April 9 is the Nome's 110th birthday.

Handeland said legislators look forward to the brunch and it brings the city lots of goodwill. He said the brunch costs $5,000 to $7,000, and the goodwill it has generated over the years has translated to significant funding for Nome.

Last January Michels received an invitation to join a public policy tour of Norway planned by the Institute of the North and partners in Norway and Alaska. The tour extends from April 30 to May 7 and includes visits to several cities and meetings with heads of government and industry. Participants will examine the Norway model in energy, natural resources, economic development, public finance and government.

On Monday Michels told the council her participation in the tour could enhance her ongoing efforts in the same policy areas on behalf of Nome. The council unanimously approved a motion by Knodel to approve funds for Michaels and a council member to participate in the Norway policy tour at a cost of about $3,000 each.

The council will hold a work session on ordinances for sales tax, taxicabs, buses and vehicles for hire at 6 p.m. on Thursday.

Public comments

Mitch Erickson told the council he would like to see the kitchen at the Recreation Center upgraded to handle cooking for events such as the Iditarod banquet on site. He described the difficulties in preparing food for about 700 banquet guests at the Nome-Beltz High School kitchen, transporting it in challenging weather conditions and carrying several hundred pounds of it into the center.

Erickson said he has assigned himself the task of seeking a $25,000 grant from the Rasmuson Foundation to upgrade the Rec Center kitchen. Nome restaurant owner Matt Tomter and members of the Millennium Hotel crew who prepared food for the Iditarod banquet will provide advice on kitchen equipment such as refrigerators and freezers, he added.

Knodel told Erickson she appreciates his efforts, and she asked him to work with Bahnke on space needs for his project at the Rec Center. Andersen said a council work session and public discussion are needed for the proposal. Erickson said he will get advice from Tomter and the millennium crew, price items that are needed, consult with Rec Center Director Chip Leeper, continue if the projected cost is less than $25,000, and if not, come back to the council and go from there.

Ordinances to be overhauled

By Laurie McNicholas

Members of the Nome Common Council reviewed a major revision of the city's sales tax ordinance in draft form at a work session on March 31. John P. Johns, a certified public accountant who developed the revisions under contract with the city, provided the council with a document showing deletions and additions to the current ordinance along with the following explanation of proposed changes.

Sales tax defined (Section 17.10.001)—This is a new section describing the city's authority to impose a sales tax pursuant to AS 29.45.700.

West Beach to be second public off-shore mining area

By Diana Haecker

The State Department of Natural Resources issued a preliminary deciarea off West Beach in addition to the East Beach public mining area. The decision is up for public comment and won't be effective until public comments are received and worked into a final decision, probably out by early June, said DNR planner Bill Cole.

Cole said that the Nome West Beach public mining area would cover 320 acres of tide and submerged lands west of the Nome causeway, extending roughly 2 miles to the western boundary of Nome's city limits, all offshore.

New stipulations put on by the DNR include that miners need to fill out an annual placer mining application to gain a miscellaneous land use permit to operate suction dredges. The size of the dredge hose is limited to eight inches and smaller on East Beach and to six inches and smaller at West Beach. "The limitations were proposed, because this is meant to be a public mining area with emphasis on recreational mining. We wanted to keep it to a more recreational type setting to maximize the life of the resource," said Cole.

Larry's Auto parking issue postponed

By Sandra L. Medearis

Paperwork has postponed an April 4 pretrial conference in the City of Nome and Larry's Auto Repair district court case.

The City is trying to collect over $6,000 the Port of Nome wants from Larry and Kay Carter for patrons parking a varying number of cars on port property across the street from the repair shop. The Carters say they do not owe the money: they had no lease for a defined area. They say patrons parked their cars of their own accord when they dropped them off

Judge Bradley N. Gater postponed the conference to reconvene April 11 at 11:30 a.m. when the Carter's attorney, Ted Stepovich of Anchorage thought the his response on behalf of the Carters to the City's March 9 revised complaint would get through the mail to Nome. At that time the court would set deadlines for filings and hash out details for the case continuing to trial. The March 9 complaint asked that the court award the City the $6.168 tariff-based fees that include more than $1,051 in interest at 10.5 percent, plus attorney costs, plus civil penalties to be determined by the court.

Harbormaster Joy Baker and the Nome Common Council agreed in

Letters -

To the Editor,

I'm concerned about the toxic chemicals in flame retardants. They are known as PBDEs. These toxic chemicals are in electronics, plastic, furniture, etc. The chemicals that come out of these things can cause cancer. These chemicals are going into the air, which goes into a cycle that ends up in our traditional Native food like salmon and other marine mammals.

Mothers who eat the food when pregnant or breastfeeding pass it on to their babies. The chemical stays in your body with the fat and continues to build up with the fat. Rural Alaskans and women have the highest risk because of all the traditional foods we eat. I am a mother who cares about her daughter and Alaskans' health. Please help support the bill to end products with PBDEs from coming to Alaska (SB 27 and HB 63). Thank you. Beverly Nakarak,

Dear Editor,

During or right after a big storm, without fail, the loader or grader would come up K Street, on to 6th Avenue, and soon after, through the I'd say there's our champ again. What's his name? The response: Greg. Greg Kruschek. We already miss the extra curve of the grader blade, which spoke volumes about the operator.

His dear family's loss is the entire community's loss. We will always remember him.

Memory Fades

It seems that history is bound and determined to repeat itself. No matter how tough the lesson, humans seem to forget the lessons hard learned by the mistakes of the past. We can look at the nuclear catastrophe in Japan. The Japanese built nuclear reactors in an area prone to earthquakes. A nuclear disaster seemed to take an improbable distant hypothesis. They never figured on a 9.0 temblor.

Earthquakes, tsunamis, floods, fires, hurricanes, tornadoes, are all national disasters that are etched into our memories. Most Alaskans remember the impact of the Good Friday earthquake of 1964. The loss was heart wrenching. Natural disasters are bad enough, but when they are compounded by the work of man, they're even more destructive. We should know better. We should know not to build on fault lines. We should know not to build a house in a swamp. We should know not to build a nuclear power plant in an earthquake rumble zone. Planning for and avoiding the potential of disaster should be the resolve of all who vow not to repeat the mistakes of the past.

We get comfortable in our complaisance. Look at Anchorage folks wanting to build homes near Earthquake Park. Look at Gov. Sean Parnell wanting to build a big hydroelectric dam on the Susitna River and the Denali fault line. We need to take a look at our own selves. Are we set for emergencies? Do we have a family emergency plan or are we set in the hope that nothing bad will ever happen? - N.L.M.-

THE GOVERNOR'S HOUSE BILL 110 PRODUCTION TAX ON OIL and GAS By Representative Neal Foster

The Governor's House Bill 110 is a piece of legislation that makes our oil tax structure more competitive when compared to other oil producing states and nations. It just passed out of the House and is on its way to the Senate. I voted to support this bill because we need to

- More oil flow through the pipeline More oil revenue in the long-term going into the state
- More jobs going to Alaskans

Without this piece of legislation, we could see the Trans Alaska Pipeline System (TAPS) shut down within ten years. Alaska currently receives 90 percent of its general funds from oil taxes and royalties, and without that revenue source Alaska would be devastated.

It's important to note that HB 110 has a ways to go, and this is not the final version of the bill. My vote was a vote to keep the process going. A "no" vote would have meant that I thought the status quo was a sustainable fiscal structure, and that is not the case. By voting "yes," I voted to continue moving forward in hopes that we can reach a compromise with the Senate.

Somewhere between doing nothing and the Governor's bill is a compromise that is being called the "sweet spot." An amendment was offered at the last minute that many felt would strike that balance. I voted to support this. It raised the tax cap from 50 percent to 60 percent and, therefore, would have meant more revenue for state coffers. Even though the amendment failed, it received good bipartisan support. As we continue to move forward, I'm hearing that more legislators might be open to this if given a chance to look at it more closely.

The Senate has indicated that there is no support for the current version of the bill. One of two things is likely to happen. First, HB 110 may die due to lack of action in the Senate. The Senate Finance Committee commissioned a study analyzing Alaska's competitiveness, and that study is not due to come out until June 2011. We are set to adjourn April 17, and the Governor has stated that he will not call a special session if an oil tax bill is not passed. Second, HB 110 (or its companion SB 49) may be passed out of the Senate with modifications to limit or eliminate some of the Governor's tax provisions.

Some are concerned that if HB 110 passes and we reduce taxes that will mean less state revenue to pay for infrastructure and services. However, the Governor has stated that if HB 110 fails and we do nothing in terms of finding a long-term solution, then we will have to start saving now. He added that cuts to the capital budget would have to be made, and this would likely be followed by cuts to services as well. Such cuts would particularly hurt rural Alaska where jobs are so heavily dependent on construction of capital projects.

Prior to the vote, I met with the Governor and his staff on three occasions to express our concerns, and I let him know how important state funding is to those of us who live in rural Alaska. By the same token, he made it clear that, in order to continue that funding, we must find longterm solutions to keep oil taxes and royalties coming to

I had a face-to-face meeting with the heads of all the regional Native corporations throughout Alaska last week. They were in favor of passing HB 110 to make Alaska more competitive. The one thing that I took from that meeting was this: by leaving the current tax structure in place, we are taking everything upfront and not investing in the future of the next generation. We must make an investment now.

PROVISIONS OF HB 110

The primary changes proposed by HB 110 are as fol-

- Brackets Progressivity: Under the current tax structure, when the price of oil goes up, so does the tax. It is the same concept as our federal income taxes. When we make more money, our tax rates increase. However, in the case of oil taxes, the higher tax rate gets applied to ALL dollars. In the case of our personal federal income taxes, the higher tax rate only gets applied to INCREMENTAL dollars. For example, assume a person makes $30,000 this year and is in the 15 percent tax. Assume next year that person makes $40,000 and is now in the 25 percent tax bracket. According to the federal tax code, that person would pay 15 percent on the first $30,000 and 25 percent on the next $10,000. But under Alaska's oil tax structure, 25 percent would have to be paid on the entire $40,000. What HB 110 does is create tax brackets similar to our own personal income taxes.
- Caps Progressivity: The current base tax and progressivity are capped at 75 percent. HB 110 sets a cap of 50 percent in legacy fields and 40 percent in new fields. Again, I supported an amendment to allow for

Bills passing through the legislature

April 18 is the last day of the legislative session and legislators are moving bills through committees and through the House. Bills passed by the House include an antitrust penalty bill that would implement criminal penalties for the state's antitrust laws, and add a civil penalty provision. HB 87 would increase criminal fines to $1 million for an individual and $50,000,000 for an organization, and make such a violation a class "C" felony.

The House passed an invasive plants law: HB 97 was passed to keep a state coordinator to manage and educate Alaskans on noxious weeds, invasive plants and other agricultural pests.

The House passed a resolution that urges U.S. Department of Interior Secretary Ken Salazar to withdraw Secretarial Order 3310, which directs the federal Bureau of Land Management to inventory and designate land with wilderness characteristics as "Wild Lands." The Senate passed a similar resolution to protect the state from federal government meddling with the care and management of state resources and to promote the economic prosperity of the state and urging the United States Congress and the President of the United States to limit federal government overreach into management of state resources. The Senate passed a resolution, declaring Sept. 9 as Fetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorders Awareness day.

A significant bill that is still in the Senate Regional and Community Affairs committee is the Alaska Coastal Management Program bill. The program sunsets if the legislature does not move the bill.

Higher education task force issues report

The Alaska Advisory Task Force on Higher Education and Career Readiness last week issued its final report making recommendations to improve Alaska's schools over the next five years. The task force then developed 20 specific recommendations that include career and technical education training, prekindergarten programs across the state, professional development of high school teachers, funding for both needsbased and merit-based scholarships, improved student counseling, early assessments of student performance, a public awareness campaign and improved Internet for distance learning. The goal is to implement the recommendations by 2017, and to have progress reports given to the Legislature by the Department of Education and Early Development.

Controversial judicial council nominee gets no vote

Governor Sean Parnell's choice for one of the public seats on the Alaska Judicial Council was voted down by a Senate committee. The nominee, Don Haase, of Valdez, made headlines for his views that extra-marital sex should be made a crime. The committee signed a document recommending a 'no' vote when the vote goes before the full legislature next Friday.

Young scoffs at award

Congressman Don Young refused an award from The Humane Society of the United States and the Humane Society Legislative Fund that would have honored his work for animals in 2010. "HSUS are hypocrites, plain and simple, and I will not join them by accepting this award," said Rep. Young. "Local animal shelters and humane societies do excellent work by caring for neglected and homeless animals, and through their spaying and neutering programs. The climbers were flown to the 7,000-foot level on the North Fork of Mt. Hayes' by private air taxi on March 27. Their plan was to set up camp near Trident Glacier before moving up the south spur to East Ridge proper and set up a ridge camp near Levi's Bump at the 10,000-foot level. The climbers decided to go light to summit the mountain when bad weather hit and buried their camp in snow. They lost their trail, built a snow shelter and pressed the button to be rescued. The Alaska Air National Guard reached them at the 11,000foot level when 210th and 212th Rescue Squadron personnel found their location on a ridgeline. August that the matter could be handled in-house without expenditure of public funds for city attorney involvement. However, a city attorney from city attorney Brooks Chandler's office formally entered the case on Jan.26. 2011, according to court documents. Court documents also show that effective Sept. 13, 2010, the City had spent $953 in attorney fees toward collecting from Larry's

The Carters, being sued by the City in small claims, asked the court last fall to conduct the case under civil rules and have asked for a jury trial. Gater said Monday that he would start looking for five days on the court's calendar in August or September to schedule the trial. The City's attorney, Meredith L. Montgomery of Anchorage, told the court that "Mr. Stepovich and I have conferred on offers and counter offers," but in the interim, were ready to set a trial date.

The Nome Common Council passed a resolution Aug. 23 last year authorizing the court filing in a reversal of a unanimous vote the previous meeting, with Council members declaring that Larry's Auto owed no rental fees, and that due diligence had not been performed by City officials. However, the Council approved the court collection move Aug. 23, saying it had received additional information, i.e. duns and copies provided by port boss Joy Baker.

Gater disclosed that he had done business at Larry's Auto Repair and the City of Nome.

'We try to sprinkle it over several businesses so we are not in a regular business relationship with one business. he said. He added that he had business with City of Nome, but not with Port of Nome.

Beach and to 18-horsepower off West Beach.

Cole said that the Nome East Beach public mining area saw heavy use in the past. "The East Beach area is becoming 'mined out'," Cole said. "Also, there is an increasing demand for another public mining area and DNR felt it was appropriate to open up a second recreational mining area."

Hence the decision by planners to propose the opening of the waters offshore from West Beach to miners. Cole also explained that the department plans to hold a lease sale for locatable minerals off East Beach in 2011. Three active offshore mining claims held by Alaska Earth Sciences and two claims owned by Cliff McHenry cover about 38 acres that would overlap with the public mining area, but won't be affected until the leases become void or are abandoned, said Cole. At that point, the claims would be absorbed into the public mining area.

Cole said that previous meetings with residents and miners have resulted in certain stipulations that are now attached to the right to recreationally mine in the waters off Nome. For example, he said, there were concerns about illegal camping on private land — most of Nome's beaches are owned by a Native Corporation, the City or Alaska Gold Company. The state land begins at mean high tide level, and that means to be on state land, miners need to be in the water. "There were concerns about trespassing, sanitation and while we don't think it was necessarily miners who camped on the beach, we understand the problem," said Cole. This translates to a stipulation that spells out that trespassing is not allowed and grounds for revocation of the miner's permit. Miners are also to remove their dredges when not operating them in the water and not to leave markers to "claim a stake." For safety reasons, the dredges need to be at a distance of 75 feet from each other when in opera-

Cole also said that people asked him whether or not it would be allowed for one company or person to rent out a number of dredges and to have different individuals operate them. This, Cole said, is not permissible, as the public mining area is meant for the recreational miner, not as a commercial lease opportunity.

But even the recreational miner is to pay production royalty of 3 percent of the net income, according to the miner's mining licenses tax re-

When asked who would be acting as the enforcer as there are no DNR personnel on the ground in Nome, Cole said that they try to maintain a certain presence in Nome, but hope to get help from Department of Fish and Game employees.

The preliminary decision is out for a public comment period, which will end on May 11.

for the waiver of interest and penalties by the city clerk within certain limitations.

Use of information on sales tax returns (Section 17.10.075)—This section is added to protect the confidentiality of information submitted by merchants on city sales tax returns. It specifies the limitations on what may be considered confidential and provides for the release of such information if legally obligated to do

Application of sales tax payments (Section 17.10.085)—This section is added to prescribe how sales tax payment should be applied when an account is in arrears.

Penalties and interest (Section 17.10.100)—This section amended to establish a penalty of 5percent per month for each month an account is delinquent up to a maximum of 15 percent of the amount in arrears for delinquent accounts. It also changes the amount of interest to be charged on delinquent taxes (excluding penalties applied) from 8 percent per annum to 15 percent per annum.

Estimated (Section tax 17.10.110) - This section is amended to describe in detail the provisions for assessing taxes on merchants whom the city deems to have failed to file accurately or promptly. The section (1) expands the authority of the city to render an estimated assessment on merchants whom the city has reason to believe have significantly under-reported taxable sales; (2) establishes a formal appeal process for merchants who wish to contest estimated assessments rendered by the city; and (3) provides an additional civil penalty of $250 per month for merchants who launch an appeal unsuccessfully pursuant to the Alaska Rules of Appellate Procedure

Tax audits (Section 17.10.130)— Paragraph (e) is added to this section to enable the city to collect audit fees in addition to taxes, interest and penalties from merchants whom the audit shows have failed to accurately report sales and taxes due. The audit assessment will be in addition to interest penalties applicable to amounts deemed to be delinquent at the conclusion of the audit.

Enforcement remedies (Section 17.10.160)—This section amended to provide a more thorough description of acts or failures to act on the part of a merchant doing business in Nome which constitute a violation of the city's sales tax ordinance. This section also codifies the remedies available to the city to enforce the ordinance, including the assessment of a fine not to exceed

Definitions (Section 17.10.180)— This section is amended to define more fully the following terms used in the sales tax ordinance: Buyer, sale, taxable sale, rental, services, merchandise and merchant.

Regulations (Section 17.10.200) This section is added to permit the city manager to implement administrative rules and procedures that are necessary to implement the sales tax ordinance but which are not specifically codified in the ordinance.

More revision needed

No council member commented on any of the revisions described above, but Councilman Jerald Brown requested modification of a current section of the sales tax ordinance called "Situs of taxable transaction" (17.10.170). This section has drawn criticism from business owners who say it needs to be clarified.

In the first draft revision of the sales tax ordinance reviewed by the council at a work session on Dec. 2, 2010, Johns proposed changing Section 17.10.170 to include taxing sales of rock, sand, gravel, minerals or precious metals extracted or refined within a 15-mile radius of the city. The council rejected the proposal, so Johns presented the unrevised version of 17.10.170 to the council on March 31. It reads:

"(a) Whenever any element or constituent part of a sale or rental of goods or services occurs in the city, the transaction shall be construed as occurring in the city for tax purposes except as provided in subsection (b) below.

"(b) Sales and rentals of goods and services resulting from orders received from outside the city by mail, telephone or other similar modes of communications shall not be construed as a taxable transaction if delivery of the goods ordered is made outside the city by mail or common carrier, or if the performance of the services ordered occurs outside the city. Any fractional portion of services performed inside the city shall not be included in this exception, and shall be fully taxable."

"I don't like "Whenever any element...," said Brown of the language in paragraph (a) of the "Situs of taxable transaction" section. "What does that mean?" He said if a board of directors meets in Nome and makes a decision about a transaction that has nothing to do with Nome, the transaction could be subject to sales tax under the current wording of the section.

"We need to provide greater specificity," Johns agreed. He said he and city staff have gained compliance from one vendor with transactions subject to the sales tax under Section 17.10.10, resulting in a lot more sales tax revenue.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked Johns to make it clear in the ordinance that all out of town sales must be delivered by mail or com-

House passes Governor's controversial oil tax reform bill

By Diana Haecker

Last week, the state House passed a controversial bill that would give tax breaks to the oil industry, which could cost the state $2 billion in revenue. Governor Sean Parnell transmitted the bill via the House Rules Committee claiming that the tax breaks would spur new exploration and investment in Alaska and keep oilfield and service company workers on the job.

The bill aims to change former Governor Sarah Palin's Alaska's Clear and Equitable Share, or ACES, oil tax regime. According to proponents of the bill, the tax cuts to oil companies are to restore Alaska's competitiveness by lowering production taxes at high oil prices and boosting incentives for companies to bring new production online. In his letter to the legislature, Parnell said, "More oil means more jobs for Alaskans, more long-term revenue to the State, and lower Trans-Alaska Pipeline System tariffs per barrel."

The bill creates two new tax brackets with incremental increases. Existing production would be taxed at a 25 percent base rate and capped at 50 percent. New production would be taxed at a 15 percent base rate and capped at 40 percent. The bill would increase the credit for production-generating drilling increased by 20 percent and it made several adjustments to ACES "to establish a better business relationship between the state and industry." The state's royalty share, and corporate and property taxes are unchanged.

Proponents of the bill like House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, and Rep. Anna Fairclough, R-Eagle River, fed the fear that oil companies seek business somewhere else. "Alaskans are leaving the state; our neighbors are leaving the state. And they're doing it because their jobs or job prospects are leaving the state," said Fairclough.

"It's not enough for Alaska to be profitable for investors, we also have to be competitive in the world marketplace," Rep. Mike Hawker, R-Anchorage, a chief advocate for the bill, said. "Alaska must seek a competitive share; that is, the highest share we can achieve while still making investment appear economically attractive. While producers can make a lot of money here at high oil prices, they can make a lot more elsewhere."

Five members of the House majority including majority leader Alan Austerman, of Kodiak, voted against the bill, which passed 22 to 16.

Nome's Rep. Neal Foster voted for the bill. Foster wrote in a statement to The Nome Nugget that he voted to support this bill because "we need to see more oil flow through the pipeline, more oil revenue in the long-term going into the state coffers and more jobs going to Alaskans."

Foster said he without the bill, the Trans Alaska Pipeline System could shut down within ten years. But Foster also noted that the bill "has ways to go." "My vote was a vote to keep the process going," wrote Foster. "A "no" vote would have meant that I thought the status quo was a sustainable fiscal structure, and that is not the case. By voting "yes," I voted to continue moving forward in hopes that we can reach a compromise with the Senate." The companion bill is now before the Senate, but the bipartisan chamber of the Senate is not as eager to embrace its companion bill,

Redistricting: Draft voting district maps due out April 14

By Sandra L. Medearis

The Alaska Redistricting Board opened the mics for a statewide tele-conference March 31, a last opportunity for people to comment and offer plans based on a desire to draw district maps for best representation of voters, preserve Native Alaskan voting power and keep opposing political parties from getting the upper hand. This week the panel started cranking out its own draft redistricting map for release by the April 14 deadline.

Six plans have been submitted. The law requires a new map every 10 years, based on the decennial (every 10 years) population count by the U.S. Census Bureau. Remember? Census enumerators knocking on the door last year trying to make sure everyone in Nome was counted?

Two proposed plans submitted to the board would change the shape of District 39 and 40 to accommodate the laws on redistricting with respect to maintaining Alaska Native voting strength. A change in the boundaries of Districts 37, 38, 39 and 40 will serve this end and an extension of District 39 eastward would bring its number closer to the ideal district size of 17,755 people.

At the Alaska Redistricting Board statewide teleconference meeting

March 31, Alaska Federation of Natives President Julie Kitka declared the intent to see that the a federal laws against historic exclusion of minority groups from the political process be observed and oppose any other districting pattern that would result in a weakening of Native voting strength.

"We are looking at the Department of Justice to assure a strong review," she said. "We are expecting the full spirit and intent of the law to be implemented. Until we have full equality, we continue to need the federal law." She acknowledged the redistricting board was under pressure to accomplish the endeavor with "a lot of effort, in a compressed time factor and under an imperfect process."

Matt Ganley, vice president of land resources at Bering Strait Native Corp. seconded Kitka's thoughts and urged the board to look at specific histories of local groups and examine the views of the future with regard to subsistence and development of resources, as an example. He noted that proposed maps brought Shishmaref back to District 39 and the Bering Strait region.

"They are a vital part of our region," he said.

On Monday, April 4, the board held the first of daily public work sessions through April 10 at the old Sunshine Mall in Anchorage to report progress on redrawing legislative districts. After the map hits the streets the 14th, there will be more input. The board has promised one of the meetings will be in Nome, left off the schedule of the first pre-plan meetings. The board has not released the schedule for these; however, May 6, in a state teleconference, is the last day for public testimony, and May 13 is the last day for additional written comments and plans.

The law gives the group 60 days to refine a final redistricting plan. The board has to create 40 districts with as close to 17,755 people as they can. That number is the 2010 state population, 710,200, divided by 40

In doing so, they are working from state computers that have existing political districts, race and land contours. They look at the political districts and compare the 2010 population with 17,755, then figure the percentage and actual number over and under. Then the fun begins: readjusting the borders to hit the target number of 17,755. District 39, containing Nome and represented by Neal Foster-D is 2,113 people (11.90) percent) short of the ideal. District 40, Kotzebue, Rep. Reggie Joule-D, is short 239 (1.35 percent). At the same time, the board must observe other requirements that will refine the proposals to meet these:

Federal constitutional requirements:

- One person, one vote. Legislative districts must contain numbers of people as equal as possible, and must be based solely on population.
- Legislative districts can deviate only 10 percent, five percent over or under the ideal size.
- No purposeful discrimination against a group that has been consistently excluded from the political process.
- No political or racial gerrymandering. Gerrymandering? That means dividing a state to give one political party an electoral majority in a great number of districts. It is a word that is bound to come up during the redistricting process. The board is predominantly Republican, so Democrats will be watching.

Federal statutory requirements based on the Voting Rights Act of 1973

1973No denial of voting rights because of race, color or status as a member of a language minority.

• No avoidable retrogression—drawing a district in a manner that worsens minority voting strength, compared to previous district configuration. The minority must be large, cohesive, and vote as a block.

State constitutional requirements:

- House districts of nearly equal size.
  Ten percent deviation is not a safe
- harbor; effort must be made to reduce deviations as much as possible.

   All parts of the district must be con- nected at some point.

   Districts must be compact.
- Districts must consist of relatively - integrated socio-economic areas.
   Senate districts composed of two contiguous House districts. District T, represented by Sen. Donny Olson, comprises House Districts 39 and 40.
- Consideration to be given to local government boundaries where it is practical to do so.
- Drainage and other geographical features must be used, whenever possible, to describe boundaries.

The state statute on redistricting—just one—rules out redrawing legislative boundaries based on population estimates.

mon carrier to be included in the exception to 17.10.170. She later provided The Nome Nugget with the following example of an exception to the sales tax for a transaction outside the Nome city limits. If a customer places an order for flowers with a Nome store for delivery to a village by common carrier (an airline), the transaction is an exception to Section 17.10.170. However, Knodel said if a customer comes into a Nome store to buy flowers to take to a village, the purchase is subject to sales tax.

Chauffeur's license revisions

The council received the following documents for discussion of revisions to Chapter 3.10 of the Nome Code of Ordinances titled Taxicabs, Buses and Vehicles for Hire: (1) A draft copy of the revised Chapter 3.10 that reads as it will if all changes are approved; (2) a draft ordinance amending Chapter 3.10 that shows proposed deletions and additions to the existing ordinance in a format that is less clear than the format showing proposed changes in the existing sales tax ordinance; and (3) a memorandum from City Attorney Brooks Chandler that says the draft ordinance is based on suggestions for fairly extensive changes from Police Chief John Papasodora, identifies changes in each section of the ordinance, and points out differences between Papasodora's suggestions and what has been included in the draft ordinance.

Papasodora suggested a few additional changes to the draft ordinance during the council work session. Council members discussed his suggestions but did indicate whether they will accept them. Knodel asked staff to provide the council with one document showing proposed deletions and additions to Chapter 3.10 in the same format used for proposed revisions to the sales tax ordinance at the next work session on Chapter 3.10 revisions.

City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck told the Nugget the council will conduct at least one more work session on proposed revisions to the sales tax ordinance and to the ordinance titled Taxicabs, Buses and Vehicles for Hire before the council considers adopting amendments to the ordinances.

Mayor Denise Michels and all council members except Stan Andersen attended the work session.

• House passes Governor's controversial oil tax reform bill

Proponents work it

A coalition named "Make Alaska Competitive Coalition" heavily advertised statewide on TV, radio and in newspapers, claiming that Alaska's tax regime is killing jobs and hurting the economy.

Proponents of tax cuts claim that unless the tax regime is changed, the pipeline will run dry, jobs will disappear and according to "Make Alaska Competitive Coalition's" website, this black and white scenario would be the consequence: "Unless Alaska becomes more competitive, we face major hurdles, including a state income tax, lower Permanent Fund dividends and greatly reduced government support for education, roads and public safety." But the promise that reducing the tax burden on the oil industry would encourage greater North Slope investment and protecting Alaskan jobs, is without basis, says a legislative analyst. Also, there are no assurances given from the industry that the money saved would flow into renewed exploration.

The governor's statements and the ads by the group MACC are an oversimplification of a very complex economical system, says a legislative research services memorandum prepared by request of the Senate Resources Committee to separate fact from fiction.

The report was issued on March 29 to the Senate and examines claims that Alaska's current oil tax structure is "driving away business" and motivating petroleum industry employers to move jobs out of Alaska.

In summary, analyst Chuck Burnham looked at a 2010 Global Petroleum Survey and stated that proponents also used parts of the same survey to make their point. "It appears that in using the results of the survey to support those views, the Administration, industry groups, and other advocates of cutting oil taxes, such as the "Make Alaska Competitive Coalition," may have oversimplified and/or misinterpreted the survey results and the degree of negativity it reflects on Alaska," Burnham wrote. He continued to say that his analyses of the data collected by the survey, and of reports published by the Alaska Department of Revenue, "suggest that a minority of industry officials hold negative views of Alaska's overall attractiveness for investment. With specific regard to taxation, a majority of survey respondents found Alaska's system attracts or has no impact on investment. These respondents combined ness decisions, but that the tax cuts are basically geared toward 19 percent of oil executives who feel that Alaska is not competitive. "Assuming that the Global Petroleum Survey is a reasonably accurate reflection of sentiments in the petroleum industry, those who claim that Alaska's taxes are "driving away business" must be referring to the business of the roughly 19 percent of industry leaders who view those taxes as a serious deterrent," concludes the report. "If that is the case, an important question for the Legislature is the extent to which it will benefit the state to cut taxes or offer incentives to win over that proportion of the industry.'

The report continues to say that other factors other than taxation need

"It appears that in using the results of the survey to support those views, the Administration, industry groups, and other advocates of cutting oil taxes, such as the "Make Alaska Competitive Coalition," may have oversimplified and/or misinterpreted the survey results and the degree of negativity it reflects on Alaska" — Chuck Burnham with those who find the state's tax regime to be nothing more than a "mild deterrent," leave fewer than 20 percent of survey respondents who view taxes to be a significant barrier to investment in the state."

The report further states that the analyst could not find research that definitively concludes that Alaska's petroleum taxation system, or that of other jurisdictions, is the primary driver of industry investment.

The report states that taxation is one of many factors that impact busi-to be taken into consideration before jumping to the conclusion that other states are simply more industry-friendly in their tax regime. North Dakota, for example, is experiencing a massive expansion in petroleum exploration and production not because of taxation, but because of technological advances in horizontal well drilling and hydraulic fracturing ("fracking") techniques. These new methods now give access to reserves that are known to be in North Dakota. "Claims that petroleum industry investment in North Dakota, at the expense of such investment in Alaska, is occurring primarily due to differences in tax structure appear to be problematic," concludes the report. "To the contrary, it is clear that the rapid expansion of oil and gas production in North Dakota was initiated by advances in oil recovery technologies."

Then the report turns to demystify the job loss data. Alaska did see a reduction of 700 oil and gas jobs between 2008 and the total for 2010. But here is the report analyst's explanation of how proponents of the oil tax cut tweaked the numbers to arrive at a 2,100 job loss number. "If one selects the month of highest employment over that two-year period—December 2008, with 13,700 jobs-and subtracts the month in which the fewest number of oil and gas employees were working - September 2010, with 11,600 jobs-a claim of job losses totaling roughly 2,100 jobs can be made," says the report document. But that number is not a true reflection of a trend and, says the report, comparing annual averages with monthly totals begins to illustrate the problems with such a claim. "That is, the number of oil and gas jobs in Alaska is a highly volatile measure, which, since 2001, has regularly increased or decreased by 200 to 600 jobs per month. As a result, selecting data on the extremes in a given pairing of months can be misleading in the larger context of inemployment," dustry Burnham. In a television commercial funded by the MACC, the narrator says, "Alaska has lost almost 2,000 oil industry jobs, while North Dakota added 25,000." The report sheds light on the faulty comparison saying that North Dakota's oil production has more wells that are geographically dispersed and that the state needs far more workers than Alaska to produce its oil. This ratio between workers and wells has been documented by the state's labor economist Neal Fried, who compared production levels and numbers of employees in Alaska to those of seven other oil production states and concluded that in every case, Alaska workers were more efficient, sometimes to a stunning degree. In this light, the report cautions that "the complex interplay of these variables with the many other factors that help determine oil and gas employment levels in the state belie simplistic attempts to explain changes in those levels or claims that jobs have been "moved to another jurisdiction.

"In the current debate over petroleum taxes in Alaska, it appears that one of the few firm conclusions that can be reached is that, with the data available and information presented thus far to the Legislature, the calculus for determining the mix of taxes and credits that are optimum to attract investment to the state is extremely challenging," concludes the report

Parnell praised the House after passing the bill, but accused the Senate of a "do-nothing" attitude. "The House recognizes that a change to increase oil production is critical and 'doing nothing' is not a strategy for future economic growth and not a strategy Alaska can afford," Parnell said on Friday. Senator Donny Olson, D-Nome, told The Nome Nugget after the house vote that, "Giving away $2 billion is not something we at the Senate want to see." Olson said that while oil companies see record profits, the Governor thinks that the measure would encourage more jobs and exploration activity. "But the oil companies have given us no indication to do something like that," said Olson. Olson said that ACES has not been in place long enough to see any indication written expression, and creativity.

Pediatricians urge parents to monitor use of social media by children

According to the AAP however,

'Using social media becomes a risk to adolescents more often than most

In an article published last week adults realize.'

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

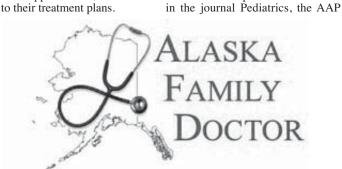

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) has urged parents to take a central role in guiding their children's online activity. While many online interactions are healthy, experts are recognizing a growing risk in the effect social media has on young people.

Recent polls indicate that over 75 percent of teenagers now own cell phones used for texting or surfing the Internet and over 50 percent of adolescents log on to some form of social media daily like Facebook, Myspace, or Twitter. One out of every five teenagers will log onto their favorite social media site over 10 times a day.

The AAP recognizes that many, if not most, of these online interactions are healthy extensions of offline behaviors. Teens may use social media to develop and maintain meaningful relationships sharing events, photos, and thoughts with their peers.

Social media has also been shown to improve health outcomes. Adolescents with chronic illnesses who have online access to their providers and patient support groups show a better understanding of their illness, miss fewer appointments, and tend to stick to their treatment plans.

Schools have also learned to incorporate social media into the learning process. Students can collaborate with other students online to work on projects or, dare I say, find answers to homework problems. Online blogs are used as teaching tools to reinforce skills in English, points out four areas of risk: cyberbullying; sexting; Facebook depression; and breach of privacy.

Cyberbullying, like traditional bullying, is the deliberate use of social media to communicate false, embarrassing, or hostile information about another person. The profound effect of being "made fun of" online can lead to severe depression, anxiety, and feelings of isolation.

Sexting is the transmitting or receiving of sexually explicit messages or photographs. The activity may be criminal or rise to the level of harassment, but often the online behavior is an ominous reflection of at-risk behaviors taking place off-line.

Facebook depression is a term used by researchers who are finding an increase in the classic signs of depression when young people spend a great deal of time on social media sites. Experts believe the sheer intensity of the online world may serve as a trigger for depression in susceptible adolescents. Often these individuals are found turning to unhealthy websites that promote substance abuse, careless sexual practices, or self-destructive behaviors.

Privacy should be a major concern of anyone using the Internet; however, the AAP feels that many preadolescents and adolescents may not understand the principle that "what goes online stays online." Any private information posted online, and every site visited, becomes a part of what is called a "person's digital footprint." This information is often used by people who wish to target young people for marketing or solicitation purposes. Furthermore, anything posted online may affect job opportunities or college acceptance years later.

The AAP has the following recommendations for parents:

• Talk with your children about the issues they are discussing online.

• Become educated about the technologies your children are using. (I know more than a few grandmothers who are on Facebook specifically to stay engaged in the lives of their grandchildren).

• Develop a family online use plan and regularly check privacy settings on family computers and media devices.

• Directly supervise online activities rather than relying on commercial software designed to monitor Internet use.

Musk ox herd died in storm surge

By Diana Haecker

A large group of muskoxen were found dead and frozen in the ice on the northern coastline of the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve. The National Park Service issued a statement saying that 32 animals were found frozen in the ice and it is possible that 23 more animals may be buried deeper in the ice.

Researchers were on a routine flight on March 15 to track radio-collared muskoxen. Four animals of the group were outfitted with VHF or GPS radio collars and the whole herd numbered 55 when they were last seen on February 14. The researchers came upon the animals frozen in the ice.

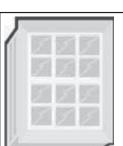

On February 25, a massive winter storm – the same that put competitors in the Irondog snowmachine race on hold – swept across the Seward Peninsula. The storm caused a tidal surge and coastal flooding. According to NPS, the group of muskoxen was caught in a low-lying area inside the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve that was rapidly inundated by rising water.

The radio collared animals were part of a five-year study on muskoxen population dynamics in northwest Alaska. NPS partnered with Dr. Layne Adams, with the US Geological Survey and Dr. Joel Berger, scientist for the Wildlife Conservation Society and professor at the University of Montana to conduct the study.

NPS researchers are taking data from the dead animals and gathering information on the storm to gain a more complete picture of what happened.

The Park Service reminds people that it is unlawful to remove horns from the dead animals and that the meat is not salvageable or palatable.

Conger rewrites rural state ski and biathlon record books with double gold performance at the 2011 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships

By NST Reporters

After winning the 7.5-kilometer ski race by nearly a minute on day one of the rural state ski and biathlon championships in White Mountain, Emerson Conger, a senior on the Nome Ski and Biathlon Team, extended his consecutive win streak record to 23 straight, and seemed poised to have an easy weekend.

But on day two, White Mountain's super sophomore, Asa Bergamaschi, would have none of that, and delighted the hometown crowd by handing Conger his first head-to-head, rural competition loss since 2006, forcing a "winner take all" for the top skier award entering the final day of competition.

Conger would bounce back from the loss in the biathlon race by building a 44 second advantage over Bergamaschi with the fastest split in the team sprint relays, and lay claim to his record fifth consecutive Skimeister Award at the 25th annual Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships.

At the 2010 WISA meet in Tanana, Conger had tied the mark for most Skiemeister Awards (earned by the meet's outstanding skier in each division), set by hometown hero Arnold Marks in 1999. Conger has become the only skier, boy or girl, in WISA history to win the Skimeister Award in each of his high school years.

Bergamaschi, who came within three seconds and six seconds of beating Conger at the regional meet the week before, pushed Conger harder than he had been since he was in seventh grade.

During the 5.4-kilometer biathlon race, the underclassman (after missing one shot in the first round) needed to shoot five out of five shots in the second round to catch up to Conger. After doing so, the two would stay neck and neck, with Bergamaschi crossing the finish line with a one second advantage, and his first WISA gold medal in a high school event.

Conger and Nome senior Sam Schmidt (a bronze medalist in the ski race) would out distance Bergamaschi and his partner Vincent Tomalonis to win the team relay. The pair from Nome would also team up for their third consecutive high school boys' team trophy.

The contest for the high school girls Skimeister Award entered the last day's relay undetermined as well, with freshman Katie Daniels of Unalakleet, (the biathlon race gold medalist), holding a one point lead over Nome junior Caity Tozier (silver in the ski race, and bronze in the biathlon), and her teammate, freshman Rosa Schmidt (ski race gold medalist).

Schmidt would post the fastest relay split by eight seconds over 2010 Skimeister Sierra Corsetti of Unalakleet, to claim her first WISA Skimeister Award.

The girls from Nome and Unalakleet were tied for the team trophy going into the relays as well. Tozier would post the third fastest split time, which proved enough for the Nome girls to win the team relay as well as the 2011 WISA team trophy, the team's second in as many years.

The junior high Skimeister

Awards were runaways for both divisions, with Aly Daniels, a seventh grader from Unalakleet putting herself on track to someday break Conger's record, by winning her second straight Skimeister Award.

Daniel's back-to-back Skimeister Awards have tied her with current Galena junior high and high school coach Stephanie Weter for second on the girls all-time list.

Daniels won the Ski Race by a margin of one minute fourteen seconds, and the biathlon by a whopping two minutes forty seconds, both over double silver medalist Lindsay Floyd of Nome. Daniels also posted the fastest split in the team relay, guiding her team to a silver medal in that event, and a narrow one-point victory over Galena for the team trophy.

Another super seventh grader, Kaleb Korta from Galena, was able to put away all challengers and claim his first WISA Skimeister award. Korta was pushed in the 4-kilometer ski race by 2010 WISA Skimeister Corey Ningeulook of Shishmaref, and in the biathlon race by Sikulik Johnson of Unalakleet, who was one of only five competitors to hit 10 out of 10 shots during the competition.

Double bronze medalist Isaac McElwee of White Mountain, and teammate Sigfred Brown would edge Korta and his Galena teammates for the team trophy.

The team from Galena earned the coveted Sportsmanship Trophy.

The 2011 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships served as a qualifier for spots on Team Alaska's ski and biathlon teams for the 2012 Arctic Winter Games in March of next year. By winning their high school age groups in biathlon, Bergamaschi and Daniels earned spots on the ski biathlon team. Tomalonis and Tozier were the next highest qualifiers in their divisions, and earned spots on the snowshoe biathlon team.

By placing first in their respective ski races, Schmidt and Korta earned spots on Team Alaska's cross-country ski team.

The six WISA athletes will join over 2,000 competitors from nine nations around the globe, all above the 55th parallel, who will compete in 20 different events in Whitehorse, Yukon Territories, Canada.

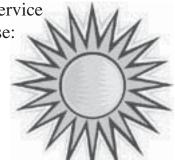

WISA has announced that the 2012 Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships will be held in Galena.

TOPSY TURVY — The top high school girls standings changed dramatically each day during the 25th annual Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships in White Mountain last weekend. On day two, Nome's Rosa Schmidt (121), the eventual winner of the Skimeister Award (won by the meet's outstanding skier) chases Katie Daniels of Unalakleet after a round of shooting during the 5.4-kilometer biathlon race. Daniels would go on to win gold in the biathlon, and qualify for Team Alaska's ski biathlon team for the 2012 Arctic Winter Games in Whitehorse, Yukon Territories, Canada. Schmidt earned the gold medalist in the 7.5-kilometer ski race on day one, and qualified for a spot on Team Alaska's cross country ski team.

ALONE AT THE TOP — Nome's Emerson Conger leads the first wave of skiers in the start of the 7.5-kilometer Ski Race at the rural state ski and biathlon meet in White Mountain on March 31. Conger would go on win the race, and post the fastest split time in the team relays, thus capturing his record setting fifth consecutive Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championship Skiemeister (top skier/biathlete) Award. From left to right, Conger, White Mountain's Asa Bergamaschi, (silver medalist in the Ski Race, and winner of the Biathlon Race), Nome's Tim Schmidt, White Mountain's Vincent Tomalonis, Nome's Sam Schmidt, (bronze medalist in the Ski Race), and Saint Michael's Jared Billingsley. Conger and Sam Schmidt would go on to win the team relay, and secure the team trophy for Nome as well.

CANADA BOUND — Caity Tozier, a junior on the Nome Ski and Biathlon Team, and silver medalist in the 7.5-kilometer ski race at the 25th annual Western Interior Ski and Biathlon Championships in White Mountain, closes out the last leg of the team relays with the third fastest split time, helping her team win the gold medal in the event, and guaranteeing that the high school girls team trophy stays in Nome for the second straight year. Tozier, on the strength of her bronze medal in the 5.4-kilometer biathlon, qualified for a spot on Team Alaska's snowshoe biathlon team for the 2012 Arctic Winter Games.

THANK YOU NOME!

Many thanks to the Iditarod overflow housing hosts for opening up your homes for so many of the mushers, volunteers and visitors. By opening your homes for so many years, you have helped make dreams come true for a lot of people who have always wanted to visit Nome and see the finish of the Iditarod Trail Sled Dog Race. Thank you to the individuals and businesses for all of your help with the development of the Iditarod Events Calendar. Your time spent working back and forth with us to finalize the events was very much appreciated. Thanks also go out to all of the press and media outlets that helped us to get the word out when we needed housing and events information. We look forward to working with you again next year!

Obituary-

Mischa Charles Ataataq Moses Mischa Charles Ataataq Moses, affectionately known as "NeeNong" and "Poppa," was born on June 26, 1954 to Alice Moses and Ralph Segock, Sr. at Benukaduk Moses Point. He was adopted to his grandparents Enoch and Judith Moses. He called them Mom and Pop. NeeNong died March 13 in Nome surrounded by his loving family. He graduated from Nome-Beltz Regional High School one year early in May 1973.

He proudly joined the Alaska Army National Guard in March 1974. He was trained as an infantryman and eventually became the Commo Chief of Company B with 1st Scout Battalion. He served 18 years and retired as E-6 making it to E-7. From 1990-1991 he graduated from Hutchinson Career Center as a carpenter. From late 1991, he worked as a carpenter, eventually becoming a foreman for various companies. He built many houses and buildings around the Norton Sound, but mostly in Elim. From October to December 2010 he worked for Bering Straits Development Company as assistant foreman building four new houses.

Mischa learned a subsistence lifestyle and carpentry skills from his pop, Enoch. He taught his sons the same lifestyle, his mechanical skills and how to provide for their families. Mischa loved to hunt and fish, he enjoyed working as a carpenter. He was very proud and doted on all his grandchildren. He also helped raise Wayne Moses and Judith Daniels, even called Wayne "Bro." Although he was raised by mom and pop, he loved his biological parents very much, often teasing Ralph as his mirror image. Mischa's sense of humor and willingness to help and teach others will be greatly missed.

Mischa is survived by his wife of 31 years, Ruth; daughter Melissa (Bernard) Jack; sons Aaron Moses and companion Paula Nakarak, Ashley (Irene) Moses and Jonathan Moses and companion Shelly Kuzuguk; sisters Ethel Lucas, Doris (Gabriel) Kotongan, Susan Hubbard, Lora Howes, Joni Segock, Kimberly

40 Days Can Make A Difference

Seeing is believing. Abby Johnson, the Director of Planned Parenthood in Bryan, Texas was asked to assist with what is euphemistically referred to as a medical procedure. Abby held an ultrasound probe to assist a doctor as he performed an abortion. For years Abby had counseled women at the Bryan office and felt she was truly helping individuals in need. Seeing the abortion first hand shocked Abby. She was horrified to see firsthand the loss of life of a baby inside the mother's womb. Abby was forced to reevaluate her beliefs and her position with Planned Parenthood. She came to the conclusion, "What I have told people for years, what I've believed and defended is a lie."

As the Director, Abby also felt pressure from Planned Parenthood itself to reevaluate her values and goals in life. Although the organization is a non-profit, Abby faced increasing pressure to turn a profit. With eyes that began to see the wider picture, she now saw Planned Parenthood as the exact opposite of what it claimed to be. It was not a "benevolent charitable organization with the goal of decreasing unwanted pregnancies." Rather, "it was an abortion machine in the business of killing unborn babies and meeting revenue goals."

The gentle hand of God was also at play. A small faith based group in Bryan began the Coalition for Life in opposition to the Planned Parenthood clinic in Bryan. With fidelity they prayed for an end to abortion. With tenderness they encouraged women to seek a different way. With discipline, they cautioned reactionary protesters who threatened or scared the women who came to Planned Parenthood. The volunteers showed love and genuine concern for the women who sought the services of Planned Parenthood. They also prayed for a conversion of heart of those who worked for the nation's largest abortion provider.

Prayer and discernment led the Coalition for Life to intensify its prayer. In 2007, they began 40 Days for Life outside the office in Bryan, Texas where Abby Johnson worked. Around the clock for 40 days, people from all walks of life came to pray for an end to abortion. Abby came to a crisis of conscience in her own life. She found herself turning to those who opposed the work of Planned Parenthood while at the same time always showing her love and respect. During a 40 day prayer vigil in 2009, Abby crossed the line and sought help from the Coalition for Life.

Seeing is believing. Abby was a little fearful as she reached out for help to the group that had been on the opposite side of her beliefs for so long. With her spiritual conversion, Abby began to see things in a new light. Planned Parenthood focused on solving short term crises with short term solutions. "Pregnancy and STDs were problems to be 'solved' by abortion and medication – even though those solutions often left the root problems in place and exposed women to great risk." On the other hand, the Coalition was working to change lives. "They cared about each woman as a whole person – an eternal person – in the context of her family, her spiritual needs, her long-range physical and emotional health. They offered solutions that would enhance a woman's life over the long term."

What started in one city, soon spread to other cities around the nation including Alaska. Forty days of prayer and fasting. Forty days of peaceful vigil. Forty days of community outreach. From March 9th - April 17th, Anchorage is one of more than 240 cities in 45 states joining together for the 40 Days for Life campaign. You need not be in Anchorage to offer your prayers and support. Forty days can make a great difference in helping people to see and believe that each life that is conceived is a precious gift from God.

a higher cap of 60 percent, which would have meant more going into state coffers while still incentivizing oil investment.

•Lowers The Base Rate For New Fields: The current base tax rate on new fields is 25 percent. HB 110 reduces that to 15 percent – but only for the first seven years of production. Then it goes back to 25 percent.

•Expands Well Lease Expenditures Credit: The current credit is 20 percent. HB 110 increases that to 40 percent and can be taken on wells north of 68 degrees latitude, thus including the North Slope.

WHY IS HB 110 IMPORTANT

In 1988, TAPS was moving 2.1 million barrels of oil per day. Today, that is down to 630,000 barrels per day. It has declined by two-thirds in just over 20 years. And production is declining at a rate of five percent to seven percent per year. With low flow comes low oil temperatures. At peak production, it took a barrel of oil four days to travel from Prudhoe Bay to Valdez. Today, it takes 13 days, and that allows the oil more time to cool. The result is a buildup of wax, water, and ice that all contribute to corrosion. This starts to become a serious issue when TAPS volume falls down into the 500,000 barrel per day range just two to three years from now. And it will require many millions of dollars in maintenance, studies, and engineering to keep an already old (built in 1977) pipeline going. At some point, the expenses involved in operating it will outweigh the income it produces. In addition, once oil drops to somewhere in the 300,000 barrels per day range, then an inability of the pumps to keep oil flowing becomes a serious problem. At a five percent decline rate, those economic and technical issues mean the pipeline could very well be shut down in ten years (and, by law, it must be disassembled to return nature to its original state). The closure of the pipeline would have devastating consequences for rural Alaska as discussed

HB 110 is important because it seeks to keep oil production up and the pipeline open. Governor Parnell believes that with the passage of HB 110 we can expect to see one million barrels per day (versus 300,000) flowing through the pipeline in ten years.

COMPETITIVENESS

Everyone agrees we must keep oil flowing through the pipeline. Where the disagreement lies is in how we do that. Some folks feel that oil companies are profitable and should not be given a dime in tax incentives. Whether that is a fair statement or not, we still have to ask ourselves: How will we keep oil flowing through the pipeline?

Alaska does not have control over many things, but it does have control over its tax structure. We do not have control over federal regulations that are preventing more oil from going into the TAPS. Conoco has been stalled by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers who rejected the construction of a bridge to access its CD-5 unit in the Alpine oil fields. Shell's efforts to drill in the outer continental shelf as well as BP's efforts on Liberty Island were both hampered with federal concerns after the Gulf of Mexico spill. The Arctic National Wildlife Refuge's 10-02 area lies only three miles from the TAPS, but all attempts to open up ANWR's coastal plain to oil development have failed.

Alaska does not have control over the technology that is opening up new oil fields around the world. These fields will be Alaska's competitors for oil investment dollars. For example, North Dakota will soon overtake Alaska as our nation's second biggest oil producer, just behind Texas, because of a new technology called hydrofracking. This controversial technique injects water and chemicals to fracture tight geological formations where the oil is trapped.

Alaska does not have control over tax structures in other oil producing states and nations. Texas' oil severance tax is 4.6 percent. Wyoming's is six percent. North Dakota's is 11.5 percent. Alaska's tax starts at 25 percent and can be double or triple that with progressivity. At the global level, Alaska lags behind the United Kingdom, Canada, and Brazil. According to the Fraser Study – an often cited report by proponents on both sides – Alaska's competitiveness ranking is 23 out of 28. According to another major study conducted by Wood-MacKenzie, Alaska's tax regime at the global level is ranked at 117 out of 129.

But Alaska does have control over its own tax structure. And we must make it more competitive if we are to keep oil investment dollars coming to Alaska. It is oil revenues that pay for our schools, roads, and airports. And it is oil revenues that pay for many of our state workers and the services they provide.

WHAT DÓÉS THIS MEAN FOR RURAL ALASKA

Alaska currently receives 90 percent of its revenues from oil taxes and royalties. If that goes away, then so does funding for state services, capital projects, and jobs. This puts services such as road maintenance and public safety at risk for cuts. Also at risk would be the base student allocation and area cost differential funds for education, Best Beginnings, and pre-kindergarten programs. And it could jeopardize power cost equalization (PCE) and municipal revenue sharing.

A loss of oil revenue puts at risk capital funding for low-income weatherization, renewable energy, public safety buildings, water and sewer, port and harbor development, heavy equipment, and fire equipment.

And without oil, we could see a reduction in state jobs with the Department of Transportation and Public Facilities, the Department of Fish and Game, Alaska State Troopers, Village Public Safety Officers, the Alaska National Guard, schools, and the university. We would also expect a drop in jobs related to expansion or new construction of state infrastructure like schools, airports, roads, and buildings.

If Alaska loses its oil revenue, then it will be rural Alaska that feels the impact first, and it will be rural Alaska that feels it the most. Currently, there are 40 members in the House and 13 members in the Bush Caucus. After redistricting, two Bush seats may end up in Southcentral Alaska, bringing the total caucus membership to 11. Some Bush Caucus members represent places like Juneau and Ketchikan, so that leaves an even smaller number of legislators who represent small and remote communities in rural Alaska. With less representation in the Bush caucus, we will have a more difficult time stopping cuts in the future. To further worsen the situation, if the pipeline shuts down, we must replace oil revenue with some other form of revenue. The main options are either tapping into the permanent fund or creating a state income tax. Neither

Part of the solution has been to position ourselves to make sure we have a seat at the decision-making table. Last November, House District 39 was welcomed into the majority, and we have a good relationship with House leadership. We also have worked with the Governor to make sure we understand his concerns and, in turn, he understands ours. At the end of the day, only he holds the red pen. It is through mutual understanding and working with him that we can do what's best for the district.

of these options are ones that most folks want to see.

The bigger solution is to fix our tax structure to make Alaska more competitive. By doing so, we can continue to attract oil investment dollars and keep oil flowing through the pipeline. This investment in our future will keep oil revenue going into the state coffers. And it will help ensure that funding continues to go to rural Alaska for services, capital projects, and jobs.

2008, and 164 in 2010, according to the Alaska Oil and Gas Conservation Commission. Investment on the North Slope is also rising. Capital and operating expenditures increased from $3.7 billion in fiscal year 2007 to $3.8 billion in fiscal year 2008 to $4.3 billion in fiscal year 2009 and $4.7 billion in fiscal year 2010. These increases are expected to continue into the coming years. "The time for an honest appraisal of the facts is now," Wielechowski said. "Alaskans are being asked to forgo billions of dollars in revenue each year which otherwise could go to improving education, building needed infrastructure, and saving for less prosperous times."

On Monday, the bill was read on the Senate floor for the first time and was referred to the Labor and Commerce, Resources and Finance Committees for further consideration.

State of Alaska Department of Natural Resources Division of Mining, Land and Water Public Notice Under AS 38.05.945 Preliminary Decision to Create the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area

The Division of Mining, Land and Water

(DMLW) has written a preliminary decision under AS 38.05.035(e) to create a second public mining area for offshore Nome. The West Nome Beach Public Mining Area will extend from 500' west of the mean high water line on the west side of the Nome causeway to the west boundary of ATS 1267, a distance of approximately 10,450', or 1.98 miles. It will extend seaward from mean high tide for a distance of ¼ mile, or 1,320. The west boundary of ATS 1267 is also the western limit of the Nome city boundary. The area of the proposed public mining area was closed to mineral entry in 2009 by Mineral Order (MO) 1094. At the time of elective there were there active mining delayers. closure there were three active mining claims ex tending into the east end of the proposed West Nome Beach Public Mining Area near the Nome causeway. The mineral rights associated with those three claims are not affected by MO 1094. The area of those claims will be excluded from the public mining area until they are abandoned or otherwise voided. The claims cover an area of approximately 35 acres. The West Nome Beach Public Mining Area will cover approximately 320 acres of tide and submerged land, less the ap-proximately 35 acres within the above mining

In 1998 the Department of Natural Resources reated the Nome Public Beach Mining Area (herein referred to as the East Nome Beach Public Mining Area) to provide recreational miners an opportunity to mine gold on the historic beaches and near offshore at Nome. Mining is conducted and near offshore at Nome. Mining is conducted primarily by the use of small suction dredges with intakes of 8 inches or less. That original public mining area has been exceedingly popular, and sees heavy use each summer from June into September. Because of the heavy use over the intervening years, the original public mining area has become somewhat "mined out." In addition, the DNR intends to hold an offshore lease sale for lo-DNH intends to noid an onsinore lease sale for lo-catable minerals in 2011, and has received very strong interest in the sale. Miners who are unsuc-cessful in bidding for leases may want to mine in the public mining area. For these reasons, the DNR believes that establishing a second public striptor area is in carter.

DNA believes that establishing a second public mining area is in order.

Due to concerns regarding the management of both the existing (East) Nome Beach Public Mining Area and the proposed West Nome Beach Public Mining Area, there will be new permitting requirements and permit stipulations for miners in both public mining areas. An Annual Placer Mining Application (APMA) and Miscellaneous Land Use Permit (MLUP) will be required for all sizes of dredges in both public mining areas. This requirement will allow the DNR to revoke permits for princers who do not follow the stipulations for poor miners who do not follow the stipulations for operating in the public mining areas. Generally, the permit stipulations will apply in both public mining areas at Nome. The stipulations will be as follows:

1. In the West Nome Beach Public Mining Area miners will be limited to six-inch or less suction nozzles with no more than 18 hp pump engines. This limitation is to main of the public mining area, and to extend the life of the resource in the new area

2. Eight-inch Nozzles with 36 hp engines will be allowed in the East Nome Beach Public Mining Area.
3. Miners may not leave any type of marker to secure a location for their exclusional states. sive mining on future days. The miner only occupies a location while their dredge is on that location and in operation. Miners will not be allowed to leave their unoccupied dredges on site in order to preserve a location.

4. Miners must maintain a minimum 75 4. Miners must maintain a minimum 75 distance between dredges. The first miner on site establishes their position; miners arriving later must locate with no part of their operation, dredge, anchors, or divers, less than 75' from the first miner's dredge.

5. State land begins at the mean high tide level. Since the average tide range at Nome is 1.04 feet, this means that in order to be on state land the miner must effectively be in the water. All of the uplands at Nome are privately owned. Therefore, highborkers can be used in the cust helevity. highbankers can be used in the surf below ean high tide, but not higher up on the

 Because the uplands are all privately owned, any miner mining or camping on the beach or tundra above the beach will be in trespass unless they have permission from the land owner. Trespass is not allowed, and is grounds for revocation of the miner's follow stipulations or for any actions that impede another miner's ability to mine, or cause a threat to safety.

8. Permits can be revoked or denied for failure to file the appropriate Mining License Tax and Production Royalty returns.

9. Miners operating in either of the publications and the publications of t lic mining areas will confine their operations to those public mining areas. Miners will not mine outside of the public mining area without an operator authorization, approved by the DMLW, from the adjacent lease holder.

10. No individual, association of individuals, or company may hold an interest in the operation of more than one suction diredge in the two public mining areas combined. The dredge may have only one hose and nozzle. The intent of this stipulation is to prevent any individual, association of individuals, or company from leasing out a number of dredges to be operated in the public mining areas and retaining a royalty on production from the dredges. Owners of dredges may rent multiple dredges to miners for use in the public mining areas, but the dredges must be rented at a set rental rate, with no royalty on production. No royalties (other than the Production Royalty owed to the State under AS 38.05.212) are owed to the State Unider AS 36.3.2.12 are to be paid on production from either of the public mining areas.

We can all play a part in

strengthening families

April is National Child Abuse Prevention Month

his month and throughout the year, Kawerak, Inc. Child Advocacy Center encourages all individuals and organizations to play a role in making the Bering Strait Region a better place for families. By ensuring that parents have the knowledge, skills, and resources they need to care for their children, we can help prevent child abuse and neglect by strengthening families and communities. Research shows that five important factors are present in healthy families. Promoting these factors is among the most effective ways to reduce the risk of child abuse and neglect. They are:

- Nurturing and attachment
- Knowledge of parenting and of child and youth development
- Parental resilience
- Social connections
- Concrete supports for parents

pril is a time to celebrate the important role that communities play in protecting children. Everyone's participation is critical. Focusing on ways to promote the five protective factors, in every interaction with families, is the best thing our community can do to strengthen families and prevent child abuse and neglect.

ecent statistics show that in 2009, an estimated 763,000 children were determined to be victims of abuse or neglect. As in prior years, neglect was the most common form of child maltreatment, but victims also suffered from physical abuse, sexual abuse and psychological maltreatment. And an estimated 1,770 children died.

Anyone concerned about the safety and well-being of a child has a place to turn The Kawerak, Child Advocacy Center. Our mission is to keep children safe from abuse and when abuse occurs, to work with our community to bring healing to these children and their families. For information, resources or to find out how you can help contact the Child Advocacy Center at 443-4379.

April 22 at the Pioneer Hall, 6:30 - 9:30 pm.

Dinner will be served prior to the presentation. Come and learn about our new outreach initiative to address child sexual abuse. Only 75 seats are available please contact the Child Advocacy Center for tickets, you must have a ticket to attend the event. For tickets please call 443-4379 or 443-6230.

What to do if your child discloses sexual abuse?

- Do not panic or express shock; remain calm and stay focused on the child
- Express your belief that the child is telling the truth
- Reassure the child that it is good to tell
- Reassure the child that it is not her/his fault, that she/he is not bad
- Let the child know that you will do your best to protect and support her/him

Shutdown averted

Congress arrives at last minute agreement

By Diana Haecker

The seventh stopgap measure to keep the federal government from shutting down passed late Friday night as Congress and the White House raced against the clock. The White House, Senate majority leader Harry Reid and House Speaker John Boehner agreed that it was irresponsible to keep funding government with short term continuing resolutions for the rest of the fiscal year. But they had to pass yet another resolution to avert a government shutdown. In Alaska, it would have affected 17,000 federal workers. In Nome federal employees had been alerted that if no agreement was struck from Monday on, they would be furloughed. The post office would not have been affected because it is not funded by the federal government, but has to earn its own money.

It came down to the wire last week when the Senate passed by voice vote, H.R. 1363, a five-day bridge resolution to give legislators time until Friday, April 15 to come up with language for a bill that would finance government through the end of FY 2011. Appropriations committee chairman, Hawaii Senator Dan Inouye, said that he was happy and relieved that this "vexing" matter has been resolved. "Our government will continue to operate. A shutdown would have been disastrous, especially at a time when our economy is showing improvement. I hope we can now get back to the business of governing and legislating," Inouye said in a statement.

By Thursday night, Congress and the White House had agreed on a number, $78 billion. This, U.S. Senator Mark Begich said, was a significant spending reduction of $39

Twenty-eight House Republicans, including 17 freshmen voted against the continuing resolution. In a press conference a few hours before the compromise was reached, Begich told Alaska media reporters in a teleconference call that a "small group of folks in the House are hell-bent on pushing their social agenda." Begich said that this should not be part of a budget discussion. Begich said a few Republicans in the House held up the entire budget bill over a socalled "rider" that would have defunded Planned Parenthood. The rub is that Planned Parenthood health centers perform abortions. However, those health centers are not allowed to use federal funds for abortions. Federal money funds other women's

Council approves MOA for artifacts from Sandspit

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Common Council unanimously approved by resolution a memorandum of agreement regarding the artifacts discovered and excavated on city property at the Snake River Sandspit Site in 2006 during construction of the Nome Navigation Improvements Project. The archeological site is called NOM-00146. The MOA is among the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, Alaska State Historic Preservation Officer, City of Nome and Nome Eskimo Community.

The Carrie M. Free fuel from

By Sandra L. Medearis

It just can't get much better than this: Following a fuel-sucking storm with with deep snow and high winds, on April 8 Nome folks woke up to a warm day and on top of that, an announcement that Kawerak, Inc., will again be distributing free oil from Venezuela company CITGO.

Whoo-hoo, 100 gallons! Kawerak has been taking applications this week in the Sitnasuak Building (with the polar bear on Front Street) from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and will be continuing through Friday, April 15.

"Although there are some qualifications," Gigi Immingan said Monday, "we urge all households to apply for the free heat."

There are two forms, one for folks who buy their own oil, and one for people whose landlords buy the oil, so tenants may get a break on rent. The form is simple. One needs to put down name, and address, phone number, and select the oil vendor to deliver the fuel before June 15. Or those who haul their own can pick it up before June 15. The free fuel faucet turns off at the continued on page 4

TSA pulls Alaska Airlines from transporting priority mail, packages

Nome Postmaster Laura Barnhill says that the mail items are flown in by Northern Air Cargo or Everts Air Cargo. "It works well," said Barnhill. She said that the change from Alaska Air to other air carriers has not resulted in any disruptions of delivery. Reliability even improved as Alaska Airlines sometimes bumped the mail because of overbooked flights, she

But as to the reason why the TSA pulled priority mail and packages from Alaska Airlines, TSA only offers a nebulous statement, saying that there are existing security measures in place for all U.S. airlines to carry U.S. mail. "Recognizing there may be issues unique to Alaska, TSA is actively working collaboratively with individual carriers and USPS to develop a solution that will result in meeting mailing needs while maintaining a high level of security," the statement said.

TSA did not return a request for clarification in time for this article. Alaska Airlines spokeswoman Lindsey said there has not been an incident that triggered the new require-

Meanwhile, Adak still gets its packages via Alaska Airlines as the TSA gave the airline an interim approval to accept and carry priority mail to the western-most community of 326 people out on the Aleutian island chain.

"We continue to work with the TSA toward a resolution that will restore Alaska Airlines carriage of all priority mail throughout the remainder of the state," said Lindsey. Other than USPS priority mail and parcels one pound and over, Alaska Airlines continues to ship all other cargo and mail within the state of Alaska as

Dear Editor,

In last week's edition of the Nome Nugget Father Tozzi of St. Joseph Catholic Church wrote a column regarding Planned Parenthood. While I understand his views may reflect the Catholic Church's position on abortion, I wanted to let people know that most of the services that Planned Parenthood provides are not abortions.

Planned Parenthood provides breast exams, screening for cervical cancer, STD/HIV testing and affordable birth control options. I know that when I did not have health care coverage, Planned Parenthood was my only option for affordable women's health services. Even now that I do have health coverage, I have utilized their services in situations when I was unable to schedule an appointment with my primary care physician. Planned Parenthood even offers services for men!

I have been in Anchorage when there have been protesters outside of the clinic, and while I do not know if they have been from the organization that Father Tozzi mentions, the ones I have encountered have not been as peaceful and prayerful as is stated in his column. Protestors outside of Planned Parenthood in Anchorage have shouted nasty things at me, and have intimidated other women I know who have been trying to access services there to the point they have been afraid to pull into the parking lot. Today, the laws of this land say that abortion is a legal choice. Every woman should have the right to make personal decisions regarding the full range of reproductive services. While Father Tozzi and others may not agree with this, their actions help to deny access to needed health services to many women. Sincerely,

Marsha Sloan Nome AK 99762

RICHARD FOSTER HONORED— Last Friday, Governor Sean Parnell, Senate President Gary Stevens, Speaker of the House Mike Chenault and several other members of the Senate and House gathered to honor the late Richard Foster. The former lawmaker's portrait was unveiled by Rep. Joe Thomas. Richard Foster's son, Rep. Neal Foster was also presented with a special cup. Incredibly unnecessary

The battle over the federal budget has caused such a bitter scene in Washington that we should be ashamed of the intransigent ignoramuses that inhabit Congress. There is no excuse for such bitterness and hostility on both sides of the aisle. The vengefulness of the Tea Party social conservatives is poisonous (especially to the Republican party). Members of Congress seem to have no personal working relationships or emotional commitments to each other or to the citizens of the entire nation. They want to make cuts that are so painful and so traumatic that it is overwhelming.

It is embarrassing to watch these partisan imbeciles declare victory because they postponed the financial showdown for another week. A non-function federal government impacts us all. In Nome we deal with FAA, TSA. Indian Health Service, Department of Interior, Bureau of Land Management, Fish and Wildlife, National Parks Service, Veterans Affairs, Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, Food Stamps, Postal Service, military, and many other federal institutions. We listen to Public Radio and watch public television while the EPA monitors radiation and the Weather Service forecasts storms. Let's not fool ourselves, we have heavy federal involvement, and as US citizens we enjoy the efforts of federal employees and federal funds. The social conservatives in Congress tell us we want more government than we are willing to pay for, so they will cut us off, yet they are willing to thrust their own social hatreds and biases down our throats.

There are tougher times ahead. We have serious issues to face and we're going to have to raise the national debt ceiling. We are also going to have to let everyone feel the pain- that means tax those rich, wealthy corporations and billionaires. Let them feel the same pinch the little guy feels. It's hard to understand why politicians feel the wealthy deserve special tax breaks. Our current political scene is unhealthy, but one has to see the humor too. Is there anything so ridiculous as Sarah Palin and Donald Trump as presidential candidates? - N.L.M.

IT'S ALL IN A NAME — This Saami family was one of many who traveled from Norway to Alaska in the late 19th century. Also know as Laplanders, the Saami were an integral part of the discovery of gold on the Seward Peninsula in the late 1890s. Samuel Balto, a Saami, taught the Eskimo people how to manage and handle reindeer. He was also a gold miner at his claims at Balto Creek on Glacier Creek Road. And, yes, Balto the 1925 Serum Run leader was named after Samuel Balto.

State to profit from high oil

The Department of Revenue released the spring revenue forecast that reflects a $3.4 billion increase in revenue over projections released in late 2010. Governor Sean Parnell made public the number last week, saying that higher oil prices result in increased revenue for Alaska. Despite the rosy picture, Parnell warned to curb the government's appetite for spending. He called on the legislature to limit capital spending to the same amount as last year's capital budget. The governor also proposed to deposit at least $2.5 billion into savings. The state's savings account boasts about $10 billion.

House OKs fiscal futures taskforce

The Alaska State House of Representatives unanimously passed a resolution creating a task force to make recommendations and propose draft legislation on fiscal policy issues.

The HCR 12 proposes to appoint a 14-person task force, with membership including two senators appointed by the Senate president and two representatives appointed by the Speaker of the House. Also on the task force would be the commissioners of Revenue and DOT&PF: the OMB director; UAA's Institute of Social & Economic Research director; one person representing Commonwealth North; one person appointed jointly by the presiding officers of banking, resource development, marketing, economic development industries; and one person appointed from the Alaska State Chamber of Commerce. The HCR 12 moved to the Alaska Senate for consideration.

First session winds down

Legislators still have lots of work to do before the first session winds down, as bills dealing with the budget, education and the controversial oil tax reduction are still being debated. Here is what passed through the chambers this past week: Big Lake Republican Rep. Mark Neuman sponsored a bill relating to self defense in any place where a person has a right to be, which passed the House and is before the Senate. The bill, HB 80, clarifies that right to use deadly force when feeling threatened exists not only in one's home but also in any place that people have a right to be. The House also passed legislation to create a fund to help pay for the planning, development and construction of an in-state natural gas pipeline. House Bill 203, sponsored by House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, creates the In-State Gas Pipeline Fund within the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation, a subsidiary of the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation. The HB 203 is now before the Senate. The House passed a bill to extend the life of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Board, after having an audit done that concluded that the ABC board should continue to regulate the manufacture, sale, barter, and possession of alcoholic beverages in Alaska in order to protect the public's health, safety and welfare. The bill would extend the termination date of the board to June 30,

In the Senate, the bipartisan working group passed an education bill that would increase the amount of money the state gives school districts by $110 for fiscal year 2012 to $5,790 per student. SB 84 also provides on-going funding for vocational education and expands tax credits that encourage donations to educational institutions. The bill is now before the House. A separate bill, SB 97, that passed the Senate provides for assistance to schools for higher fuel and utility costs. The SB 97 improves the state revenue sharing program by taking the extra money coming into the state and giving it to municipalities and school districts during periods of high oil prices.

The Alaska Health Freedom Act passed the House on Monday. The bill codifies as state policy that every person in the state of Alaska is and shall continue to be free from government compulsion in the selection of health erty is protected by the Constitutions of the United States and the State of Alaska. The bill removes the authority of any state official or employee from enforcing any penalty that violates the policy. The HB 1 affirms the right of all Alaskans to choose their own mode of securing health care services. The law was drawn up in response to the federal health care reform that supposedly infringes upon the constitutional rights of U.S. individuals by mandating all citizens and legal residents have qualifying health care coverage or pay a tax penalty.

Other bills on the move include a bill passed by both chambers proclaiming November 2011 pancreatic cancer awareness month. The Senate passed a bill that would allow for tougher penalties for a person who gives alcohol to minors if that person is a convicted sex offender or child kidnapper. Also passed are Senate Bill 58, increasing the number of Superior Court Judges and Senate Bill 94, adding a second verse to the Alaska

Still in the Senate Finance Committee is a bill that would raise the income eligibility requirement for Denali KidCare to 200 percent. In the Senate Labor and Commerce committee is the governor's controversial oil tax plan, House Bill 110. Its companion bill, SB 49, is held in the Senate Resources Committee. Senators feel that they need more data on the existing ACES and are not comfortable to vote on a multi-billion dollar item. Senate President Gary Stevens of Kodiak gave an unusual speech addressing the issue on Monday on the Senate

NOAA designates Beluga whales habitat

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration announced last week that 3,016 square miles of Cook Inlet will be designated as critical habitat for Cook Inlet beluga whales. The whales were declared an endangered species in 2008 under the Endangered Species Act. The ruling, however, excludes the Port of Anchorage. The state filed a lawsuit to challenge the designation of belugas as endangered and Governor Sean Parnell stated that the critical habitat decision further harms the Alaska

Court sets Larry's auto jury trial for Oct. 10

By Sandra L. Medearis

A pretrial conference continued in district court April 11 concerning an attempt by City of Nome to collect money administrators say Larry's Auto Repair owes for repair customers parking on Port of Nome property. Owners of Larry's Auto say nothing doing—third parties parked their own the cars on port property. They have asked for a jury trial. The issue before the court is whether Larry's Auto owes the City, and if they do, how much.

Right off Monday, Judge Bradley N. Gater said he found a problem with an amended claim filed by the City on March 7 that, besides asking for parking fees, contained a "prayer for injunctive relief' against Larry's Auto parking cars on port property. The City doesn't have a prayer in Second District Court, Gater said.

Seeking injunctive relief would present "a very ugly question regarding jurisdiction," Gater said. "An injunction is not within the jurisdiction of this civil court. It would appear to me jurisdiction is in Superior Court. It would appear this needs to be removed to Superior Court."

The City of Nome would withdraw that language, the City's attorney, Meredith L. Montgomery, said, attending the conference by telephone. Asked if that was satisfactory, Ted Stepovich, representing Larry's Auto Repair, also by phone, said he would have to consult with his clients and enter a position. Larry and Kay Carter own Larry's Auto Repair.

Gater put a jury trial on the court calendar for six days beginning Oct. 10, from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. The final pre-trial conference is slated for Sept. 30.

Tariff says they owe

Court documents show about half a dozen duns and letters sent to Larry's Auto from mid-2007 through mid-2010 by city managers and Joy Baker, port boss, demanding payment at four cents per square foot per week for vehicle storage on Port of Nome property under rules of the Port's tariff schedule. Baker and Bahnke discussed the issue with Larry Carter on July 9 last year. A May 12, 2009 letter over the signature of Bahnke with copies to city employees Cussy Kauer, Joy Baker and Brooks Chandler, city attorney, asks for payment and revokes Larry's Auto's creditworthy status with the City.

The court process started with a small claims suit against Larry's Auto last August. The Carters a short time later asked that the issue become a different kind of case falling under the court's civil procedure. The City of Nome on March 9 filed a revised complaint asking that the court award the City the $6,168 tariff-based fees that include more than $1,051 in interest at 10.5 percent, plus attorney costs, plus civil penalties to be determined by the court.

Unclean hands

In a reply to the complaint filed April 4, the Carters again say they do not owe the City: they had no lease on the property, third parties parked the cars, and the City owes them attorney costs and damages for loss of customers and income and damage to their business reputation, according to court documents. They say the City selectively enforced its ordnances and regulations against the Carters, treating them differently than similarly situated persons or entities. They say the City went against the equal protection clause of the Alaska Constitution in making unjust distinctions between persons. Therefore, they say, the complaint is barred by the "doctrine of unclean hands." The doctrine of unclean hands is a rule of law that someone bringing a lawsuit or motion and asking the court for equitable relief must be innocent of wrongdoing or unfair conduct relating to the subject matter of his/her claim.

According to court records, discussions have been held regarding a prompt settlement of the dispute. The court has set a deadline of August 12 for a settlement conference or appointment of a mediator.

June 15 deadline.

The fuel is being distributed in the villages also. Households located in villages outside of Nome in the Bering Strait Region may begin picking up fuel from their fuel vendors starting April 15 through June 15, 2011.

The 100-gallon credit voucher comes from Venezuela through the Citizen Energy Oil Heat Program, a nonprofit organization that provides energy assistance and other social and charitable programs. The oil program has distributed millions of gallons to cold weather states since its beginning in 1979.

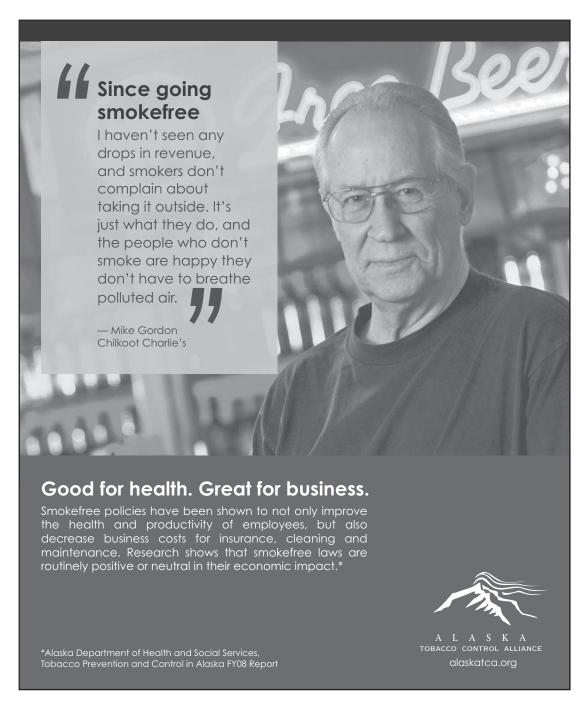

"This unique program helps protect needy families from volatile heating oil prices, which often leave households having to choose between heating the home and paying for other life essentials, such as food, health care, or clothing," a statement from Citizen Energy says.

If you snooze, do you lose? Nope, not if one wakes up before the June 15 cutoff.

"If people miss the voucher drive this week, they we urge people to go to Kawerak's General Assistance office before June 15," Immingan said.

Besides Alaska, 15 other states participate in the program: New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Delaware, Connecticut, Vermont, Rhode Island, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Wisconsin, Michigan, Indiana, Pennsylvania, Maine and Virginia. Seward Peninsula homes will join 200,000 other households affected by the giveaway.

Nome student accepted into People to People academic program

Mackenzie Hall, a student at Nome-Beltz High School, will join a select group of students representing their schools, communities, and country as People to People Student Lead-

Mackenzie has been accepted into the People to People Leadership Summit, June 28-July 7. People to People Student leaders complete an academically rigorous program focused on leadership development and global awareness. Mackenzie was nominated and accepted for the honor based on outstanding scholastic merit, civic involvement, and leadership potential.

The People to People Leadership Summits bring together outstanding Student Leaders from around the globe to focus on leadership, teambuilding, community service, college admissions, and professional aspirations. Students learn how to effectively make a difference in their communities, develop skills to help them lead tomorrow's world, and build their college résumés, with the chance to earn academic or servicelearning credit.

Participants also gain insights to guide their educational and professional careers, and benefit from a strong focus on college admissions. Through workshops, presentations, excursions, and discussions, Student Leaders attain a clear advantage as they pursue their selected fields of interest. Students will have the opportunity to meet with admissions officers and gain valuable advice for navigating the college application process. In some locations, students will be able to tour several area universities.

The 2011 People to People Leadership Summits will convene at Columbia University; George Washington University; Johns Hopkins University; Harvard University; Stanford University; University of Pennsylvania; and University of California, Los Angeles.

The program is coordinated by People to People Ambassador Programs to fulfill the vision President Dwight D. Eisenhower had for fostering world citizenship when he founded People to People International during his presidency in 1956. #### Northstar swimmers shine in Ketchikan

Six members of the Nome Northstar Swim Team traded clear blue skies and arctic white for the large green trees found in the rain forest of southeast Alaska when they flew to Ketchikan for the Mad Dash Open Swim Meet. They challenged themselves against teams from Petersburg, Craig, Juneau, Sitka and their hosts, the Ketchikan Killer Whales, to see how well they could finish.

The Mad Dash Open meet was run differently than most meets. All swimmers were allowed to swim any event they chose, rather than be limited by age. This opened up new opportunities for the swimmers and a chance for the smaller teams to swim relays. The four competitive swimming strokes are: FR-Freestyle, FL-Butterfly, BA-Backstroke, BR-Breaststroke. An IM is an Individual Medley-one quarter distance of each of the four competitive strokes.

Clinic in Gambell is operating out of a temporary location

Earlier this month, the Norton Sound Health Corp. Executive Committee and staff traveled to Gambell to conduct an executive committee meeting. During the meeting several community members and Community Health Aides expressed a concern about the condition of the clinic facility. In touring the local clinic, a quick assessment of the current clinic was conducted and several deficiencies or areas of concern were found. NSHC administrators were concerned with the findings in the building and consider the building unsafe for the employees and patients of Gambell. Immediately, NSHC assembled a response team for the closure of the facility. This response team is working to support Gambell IRA and the Gambell City government to secure a suitable location for Indian Health Services provides lease funds to the City of Gambell to cover costs of the maintenance worker, materials, repairs, heating fuel, utilities and janitorial services. Historically the funds provided by

IHS have not covered the cost of providing these vital functions. The City of Gambell has been doing their best to provide these services along with keeping up the maintenance of the building with the resources provided. This lease arrangement between IHS and the facility owner (IRA or City) is similar to all of the villages in our region with the exception of Unalakleet.

The solution

1. Correct the main health and safety hazards in one portion of the Gambell Clinic, and restrict use to "on emergency basis" only.

2. Find a temporary facility where we can provide a complete array of health clinic services.

3. Continue to assist Gambell in their search for funding for a new clinic.

The Health Aides have made arrangements to make home visits to the elders or disabled patients. The on-call telephone number is 907-985-2400 and should be called for emergencies. For patient travel information the number is 907-985-5031.

Descendants of Alaska Saami herders meet across continents

Members of past and present reindeer herding communities in Nome and Kotzebue welcomed a visit last month from Hugh Beach, who worked with the herd owned by the Northwest Alaska Native Assn. and assisted with many corrallings on the Seward Peninsula in 1982-83. He is a long-time advocate for contact and information sharing among descendants of Alaska Saami reindeer herders in both Scandinavia and America.

Beach is a professor of cultural anthropology at Uppsala University in Uppsala, Swewho den has worked among reindeer herding peoples for almost 40 years. He has herded among Saami (Lapp) people in Sweden; migrated with Saami herders in northern Norway; and visited herders in Russian on the Kola Peninsula, in Siberia both before and after the dissolution of the Soviet Union, and Evenki reindeer herders in northern China.

Reindeer herding in Alaska began in 1892 when Sheldon Jackson, a missionary and general agent of education for the territory imported 171 reindeer from the Chukchi Peninsula in eastern Siberia to the Teller Reindeer Station and hired four Chukchi herders to teach reindeer husbandry to Alaska Native apprentices. Jackson intended that the apprentices eventually would become owners of reindeer herds. The Chukchi herders returned to Siberia in 1894, so Jackson recruited Saami reindeer herders from Norway to train Alaska Natives to manage the herds.

While Beach was working for NANA, he interviewed descendants of herders whom Jackson recruited in Norway and brought to northwest Alaska in 1894 and 1898. He subsequently wrote an 81-page article, "The Saami in Alaska: Ethnic Relations and Reindeer Herding," published in Contributions Circumpolar Studies by Uppsala University in 1986.

Beach's article focuses on the approximately 70 reindeer herders who were brought from Norway to Alaska by Jackson. A majority of them were Saami, and some of them brought their families along. Jackson's published list of the herders' names and the names of their wives and children is included in the article (pp. 74-75). The first group of Lapland recruits in 1894 was composed of six Saami herders, four women and several children (p. 74). The second wave of 113 Lapland recruits who sailed from Norway to America in 1898 included 43 native Saami herders, 16 native Saami women, 19 native Saami children, 15 Norwegian herders, 3 Norwegian women, 7 Norwegian children, and 10 Finnish herders (Finnish speaking residents of Norway) (pp. 41-42).

Among the descendants of the Scandinavian herders whom Beach met during his work for NANA in 1982-83 was Lila Gregg of Kotzebue, who is now deceased. In an email to The Nome Nugget, Beach explained how he helped locate her relatives in Norway.

"Lila was the daughter of Alfred Nilima (page 75 of my book under 'Finlanders,' sometimes spelled Niilima)," Beach wrote. "Ethnic idenof one of Alfred Nilima's sons, visited Sheldon in Anchorage and then went to Kotzebue to meet more of their Alaska relatives.

Saami descendants' network

Fjeld, who learned as an adult that her father was a full-blooded Saami is deeply involved in a cultural revival among people of Saami ancestry in North America. She co-edits

Baiki, the International Sámi Journal, a periodical started about 16 years ago. In 2007 Fjeld worked as a National Service volunteer in the agency's Nome office while pursuing a three-year project to interview elders in villages that were sites of reindeer stations in Alaska. The cultural information and oral history research program was called "The Reindeer Bridge," in recognition of the historic link between reindeer people of Chukotka, western Alaska and Sapmi (Lapland). The project included a large traveling exhibit of historic photos and stories gathered in the previous 15 years from descendants of Alaska Saami.

Beach collaborates with Field in efforts to put Saami descendants on different continents in contact with each other. "I've been in communications with Faith about such cross-Atlantic Saami relations (and potential relations) for years, long before I ever met her in person, and I also spread the word of Faith's organization to Saami descendants in Canada...," he wrote in an email to the Nugget.

Nomeite Pearl Johnson said she became aware of her Saami connections while assisting Fjeld with the traveling exhibit. Pearl said she is not of Saami descent, but descendants of Alaska Saami have married into her family. Her family is from White Mountain. "I went through my photos of Saami and papers and realized there was a connection," she

At Fjeld's suggestion, Pearl also provided assistance to Kristine Nyborg, a student at the University of Tromsø who visited Nome in 2009 to produce a film for her master's degree called Saami Footprints in Alaska. That led to Pearl's visit last summer to Tromsø, where she attended the annual Saami Council with delegates from Russia, Sweden, Finland, and Norway. She also attended the annual reindeer herders' council in Sommeroy at the invitation of Saami Council members.

During the herders' council in Sommroy, Saami Council member Olav Mathis Eira said to Pearl, "Yeah, you are sitting with your relatives." Pearl later realized she had been sitting with descendants of Alaska Saami who had herded reindeer in the Council, White Mountain and Golovin areas, people her parents and other relatives knew well. Pearl said Eira had visited White Mountain when Tom Gray operated a reindeer herd there. Pearl showed Saami women a pair of skaaler (Saami boots) that her mother, Frances Johnson made in the 1950s or 1960s. The women told her the boots were of the southern Saami style and were made with skin from reindeer fibula.

When Fjeld learned that Beach planned a brief visit to Nome last month, she contacted Pearl, who arranged interviews with him by the Nugget and Radio Station KNOM; a social gathering; and a presentation on reindeer herding to a small group that included Rose Fosdick, vice president of natural resources, Kawerak, Inc., and Faye Ongtowasruk, who owns a reindeer herd at Wales. Beach showed them films he took while herding with NANA in the early 1980s; while on migration with herders in northern Norway in the 1970s; and when visiting herding continued on page 7 to be of Saami descent to herd reindeer. Jackson was mainly interested in bringing over good reindeer hands, and some of these were Finlanders and of those there was probably a good deal of Saami mix. In any case, Alfred got a wife in Alaska and some kids but then sold part of his herd and returned to Norway. Lila never knew what happened to him except that he died in Kautokeino, Norway. When I got back to Sweden and traveled north to northern Norway I checked around and found his gravestone in the churchyard in Kautokeino. Then I asked around for his relatives and found them there .... ' "I recall that the family in Norway was at first somewhat worried (despite my assurances to the contrary) that I might be representing a claim from Lila for part of Alfred's inheritance in Norway," Beach wrote. "Maybe this is a reason contact was
